About the Editors 611

INTRODUCTION

The Emerald Guide to Baseball is our attempt to fill the gap in the historical record created by the recent demise of the Sporting News Baseball Guide. First published in 1942, Sporting News Guide was truly the annual book of record for our National Pastime. It is our great privilege to document for posterity a slice of recent baseball history in our new book.

The Emerald Guide is available in both a printed version and in a downloadable PDF format. The 2013 edition of the Emerald Guide runs nearly 600 pages and covers the season; it also includes a 2013 directory of Major League Baseball.

Historically, the primary purpose of annual baseball guides has been the publication of the official league standings plus the official team and individual statistics for both Major League Baseball and Minor League Baseball. Many other types of content have been included in the annual guides over the years, but these core statistics were always the book's raison d'etre.

Our new Emerald Guide follows faithfully in that tradition, containing the official batting, pitching, and fielding statistics for every team and every player in the Major Leagues plus extensive lists of league leaders. As with the TSN Guides, the Minor League Baseball section in our book includes the Mexican League but does not include independent leagues, foreign leagues, or winter leagues (aside from standings and leaders for the Dominican and Venezuelan Summer Leagues).

Another key function that the annual guides have historically filled is presenting information on the upcoming major league season. The World Wide Web has become the place most fans look for such information in recent years, but it is still important for this information to be recorded for posterity. The Web is a wonderful tool but too much of its content is ephemeral.

We are proud to publish in our new Emerald Guide an enormous amount of information that was never included between the covers of the old TSN Guides. We hope you like the editorial mix we chose. Our book does not include every type of information that the old Sporting News Guides printed, however.

DIRECTORY AND 2013 MAJOR LEAGUE PREVIEW

Contact information for Major League Baseball, Minor League Baseball, and many other related organizations important to the baseball community is contained in the Directory section.

The 2013 edition of the Emerald Guide includes the following information for each major league team:

- Schedules for spring training and the 2013 regular season;
- Front office directories, including executive officers and baseball operations staff;
- Minor league affiliates, including managers and coaches;
- Spring training rosters, including non-roster invitees;
- Radio, television, and cable TV broadcast information, including Spanish-language broadcasts; and
- The most comprehensive lists of career batting and pitching leaders for each franchise ever printed in an annual guide.

2012 SEASON IN REVIEW

This section begins with a substantive essay documenting the major events in the world of baseball in 2013, both on and off the field. Also included are:

- Detailed standings and breakdowns;
- Complete batting/pitching/fielding statistics;
- Top qualifiers and department leaders;
- Active career leader boards;
- Notable performances;
- Day-by-day game logs;
- All-Star Game box score and play-by-play;
- Postseason box scores and play-by-play accounts;
- Postseason register;
- Umpires roster;
- Transactions logs;
- Coverage of the June first-year player draft;
- Major league debuts; and finally,
- The most detailed baseball necrology ever published.

EXPANDED STANDINGS

Expanded Standings for the major leagues and include team home/away records, records in one-run and extra inning games, records vs. LHP/RHP, records vs. each division, in interleague play, and vs. each opponent. Also shown for the NL and AL are total and average attendance, head-to-head Won-Lost records, and head-to-head Runs Scored/Runs Allowed data. Final wildcard standings are shown with each team's expected win total and "luck" calculation. Also listed are club payrolls (from Cot's Baseball Contracts) and the franchise values as reported annually by Forbes magazine. The 2013 Ballpark Factors are calculated by Pete Palmer of ESPN Baseball Encyclopedia. [NOTE: Interleague games are not included in the ballpark factor computations.] Similar, though less extensive information is presented for each minor league.

BATTING, PITCHING AND FIELDING STATISTICS

Comprehensive team and individual batting statistics include separate listings for designated hitters and pinch hitting. Regarding players with stints for multiple clubs, statistics are broken out separately, as well as showing thier season totals summed. The alphabetic listing includes pitcher batting results and is followed by the names of those who appeared in games without garnering a plate appearance. Fielding statistics are broken out by position. Leader boards in over 45 batting and pitching categories show the Top Five performers in each major league. Minor league leader boards cover 42 batting and pitching categories.

The Top 25 active career batting and pitching leaders are also listed in 62 major categories.

TRANSACTIONS

Transactions Logs contain all moves pertaining to each club's 40-player roster, listed chronologically.

DAY-BY-DAY GAME LOGS

Day-by-Day Game Logs summarize the most comprehensive set of daily data to appear in print for each club, including Runs Scored, Runs Allowed, Hits, Hits Allowed, Errors, Relative Position in Standings, Streaks, Day/Night, Attendance, Multiple Pitchers of Record, and Home Team Home Runs. A separate table lists each teamís games started by position as well as its most frequent lineup used.

NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENTS

Outstanding pitching and batting performances are documented with the date of occurance shown. A table follows that lists records set and records tied by individuals and clubs, plus individual career milestones of note.

ALL-STAR GAME AND POSTSEASON

Box scores and play-by-play accounts are shown for the Midsummer Classic and all games of the Fall Classic. Box scores for Division and Championship Series games are included as well as composite postseason registers for batters and pitchers.

MAJOR LEAGUE DEBUTS

The Major League Debut section contains all players who made their first big-league appearance in 2013. The players are listed by club, with date of birth, place of birth, position, height/weight, bats/throws, and signing data (date, draft year, round, overall pick number, and recommending scout).

FIRST-YEAR PLAYER DRAFT

The First-Year Player Draft includes a complete listing of players (mostly amateur) selected in the annual June cavalcade, including their full name, date of birth, height/weight, bats/throws, position, school, level, and bonus amount (if known).

NECROLOGY

The Emerald Guide necrology documents the passing of each major leaguer with a brief baseball epitaph, not merely a regurgitation of a statistical line. The minor league necrology is the most thorough ever published. Among other features, it recognizes the military service of the deceased players.

UMPIRE REGISTER

The Umpire Register shows the full name, date of birth, place of birth, debut year, crew assignment, uniform number, ejections, and number of games broke out by position for all active men in blue.

SIDEBARS

Throughout the Emerald Guide, we have included other significant historical information for reference purposes. A list of these sidebars appears at the end of the Table of Contents. Sidebars include the annual award winners for the Baseball Writers' Association of America awards with voting totals.

Other important major league and minor league awards, including those from the Sporting News and Baseball America are also shown.

Winners of the Most Valuable Player, Cy Young, Rookie of the Year, and Manager of the Year awards are listed. Ex Post Facto selections for MVPs, Pitchers of the Year, and Rookies of the Year are included, as picked by the editors of the ESPN Baseball Encyclopedia, for every year and league in which those awards were not originally given.

Other sidebars include a listing of all members of the National Baseball Hall of Fame (sorted by type of election and year inducted) as well as results of each World Series, League Championship Series, and Division Series. Also included is a historical listing of top selections of the First-Year Player Draft, with bonus amounts.

HISTORY OF ANNUAL BASEBALL GUIDES

Since professional league play began in 1876, there have been dozens of different types of annual baseball books that have used the term guide in their titles. However, to a well-read baseball fan, the term annual guide normally refers to a series of official or quasi-official books that published the official batting, pitching, and fielding statistics for both the minor leagues and major leagues for the previous season.

The most important series of annual baseball guides were:

- The Spalding Guides, 1876–1939;
- The Reach Guides, 1883–1939;
- The combined Spalding-Reach Guides, 1940–41; and
- The Sporting News Guides, 1942–2006.

Note that the season covered in each guide was the year before the publication/cover date. Also note that the titles for these annual guides often changed over the years. For example, the Sporting News series of guides had five different titles from 1942 through 2006. All except the first edition in 1942—which was entitled the Official Baseball Record Book—contained the phrase "baseball guide."

The Spalding Guides from 1908–1924 did not contain minor league statistics. During this period; Spalding also published annual Spalding Record books, which contained the missing minor league information as well as somewhat less major league coverage.

The unofficial 1943 Baseball Guide and Record Book published by the Sporting News truncated its minor league statistics. Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis put out a very extensive official guide for 1943 that was complete. Barnes also published an official baseball guide in 1945 (covering both the 1943 and 1944 seasons) and in 1946.

THE NATIONAL GAME: 2012 YEAR IN REVIEW

BY GARY GILLETTE WITH STUART SHEA AND DOUG WHITE

The Grand Old Game lurched through a bumpy year in 2012, exemplified by the contrast between the felicitous drama around one Cabrera's pursuit of the American League Triple Crown and the controversy over whether another Cabrera would be recognized as the NL batting champion. Miguel Cabrera's shining accomplishment ultimately overshadowed the embarrassment of having a steroids user post the highest batting average in the National League—sanitized only a little by having Melky Cabrera voluntarily withdraw his name and by changing the rules so that he could not be considered.

Financially, the game was more prosperous than ever, with record revenue, the highest franchise values, a record-shattering franchise sale price, and unprecedented rights fees directly fattening the wallets of the owners while indirectly fattening the wallets of the players. The specter of performance-enhancing drugs, however, reared its ugly head multiple times, raising the question whether the so-called "Steroids Era" was really over.

On the field, the six divisional races were more competitive than in 2011, though the Wild Card races lacked the crescendo of a year earlier because of the addition of an extra Wild Card team in each league. Four of the six division titles were won by a margin of four games or less, and many fans and pundits rejoiced because four of the eight October finalists had payrolls in the lower half—with Oakland winning a division title with the smallest payroll in baseball.

Based on the Nielsen ratings for the postseason, though, it's hard to say that anyone was watching aside from partisans of teams still playing and a handful of dyed-in-the-wool baseball fanatics. That despite the addition of the Wild Card play-in games, the fact that all four Division Series went to the limit, and an exciting, seven-game National League Championship Series. None of which prevented Major League Baseball from cashing in with long-term, record-setting contract extensions with the three non-captive networks that carry baseball.

BEGINNINGS AND ENDINGS

As the new year began, Oakland was active, re-signing center fielder Coco Crisp on January 5 and acquiring corner outfielder Seth Smith from Colorado 11 days later. Oakland piled on more avoirdupois by signing 38-year-old Bartolo Colon to a one-year deal on January 24.

Three Asian players cracked the headlines by inking with big-league clubs. First, the Orioles nabbed 26-year-old Taiwanese hurler Wei-Yin Chen on January 10; a week later Milwaukee signed veteran outfielder Nori Aoki, who had played eight years for the Japanese Central League's Yakult Swallows.

The biggest splash came on January 18, as Texas officially signed hurler Yu Darvish to a six-year, $56-million contract after spending more than $51 million on a posting fee for the right to negotiate with him. Darvish, who turned 26 in August, had made his name with five superb seasons for the Nippon-Ham Fighters of the Japanese Pacific League.

All three players would make major contributors to their teams' 2012 successes. Darvish finished third in voting for the AL Rookie of the Year award, with Chen fourth and Aoki ending up fifth in the NL balloting.

Toronto and 44-year-old Omar Vizquel agreed in late January on what would be the 23-year veteran infielder's last contract. Tampa Bay brought back its former first baseman Carlos Pena on January 24 after he had spent a year with the Cubs.

The Yankees inked a pair of veteran platoon outfielders by signing Andruw Jones on January 25, with Raul Ibanez donning pinstripes nearly a month later. Both ended up playing critical roles in New York's season. Meanwhile the Red Sox countered with a one-year deal for well-traveled gardener Cody Ross. GM Brian Cashman had already bolstered his club's mound corps with the free-agent signing of Hiroki Kuroda (one year at $10 million) and a trade of prospects Jesus Montero and Hector Noesi to Seattle for young fireballer Michael Pineda. While Kuroda was excellent in the Bronx, Pineda was injured and did not pitch in 2012.

Cashman's final offseason surprise was luring lefty Andy Pettitte out of retirement with a one-year, $2.5 million offer to rejoin the Yankees' rotation. Pettitte accepted on March 16 and was in the majors in mid-May. He suffered a broken ankle when hit by a line drive in June, but was effective when healthy.

Baltimore dealt its onetime rotation anchor Jeremy Guthrie to Colorado in exchange for two helpful right-handers, Jason Hammel and Matt Lindstrom. Guthrie didn't last the full season with the Rockies, who traded him to Kansas City on July 20.

On February 8, Cincinnati and outfielder Ryan Ludwick agreed on a one-year, $2 million deal that turned out to be a great investment for the team as, at age 34, the outfielder had his best season since 2008.

The biggest—certainly the most remunerative—contract news of the offseason came January 26, when the Detroit Tigers officially announced that they had signed slugging free-agent first baseman Prince Fielder to a nine-year, $214 million contract. Fielder's deal will carry him through age 36, a calculated risk that the Tigers willingly assumed in order to win now.

Several prominent players retired before the 2012 season began. Veteran infielder Craig Counsell called it quits on January 17, and shortstop Orlando Cabrera hung up his spikes the next day. The Yankees and Red Sox both said goodbye to their longtime catchers, as Jorge Posada of New York ended his 17-year major league career on January 24, and Jason Varitek, who'd spent 15 seasons with Boston, retired on March 1. Varitek's longtime teammate Tim Wakefield, who had flung the flutterball in the majors for 19 seasons, announced his retirement on February 17 at age 45.

Outfielder Pat Burrell retired on January 30, and pitcher Danys Baez did the same on February 27. Infielder Carlos Guillen retired on March 6. Veteran shortstop Edgar Renteria spurned two contract offers for the 2012 campaign but came back to play for Colombia in the qualifying round of the 2013 World Baseball Classic in November.

Several other veterans reached the end of the road when they were released late in spring training, including 14-year veteran infielder Alex Cora, 13-year corner infielder-outfielder Casey Blake, and veteran left-handed relievers Trever Miller, Joe Beimel, and John Grabow. Right-hander Joel Zumaya's comeback attempt ended when Minnesota released him on March 28, and the next day, infielder Cristian Guzman and outfielder Aaron Rowand were put out to pasture as well.

Several players who had undergone surgery in 2011 missed the entire season, notably Oakland infielder Scott Sizemore and Detroit DH Victor Martinez. Ryan Howard, who tore his left Achilles tendon making the last out of the Phillies' 2011 season, opened the year on the DL, while his teammate Chase Utley also started disabled and played just 83 games because of chronic problems with his left knee.

Another star slugger, Braves third baseman Chipper Jones, began his final season on the disabled list with a torn meniscus in his left knee. He returned to action April 10, and hit well when physically able, but also missed significant time in May and June with another leg injury. Meanwhile Nationals outfielder Mike Morse, who had clubbed 31 homers in 2011, sat until June with a lat strain and hit only 18 homers in 102 games.

Two bizarre injuries occurred to pitchers in the spring. On February 29, A.J. Burnett, expected to be Pittsburgh's No. 1 starter, bunted a pitch into his own face, shattering his right orbital bone. Following surgery on March 2, the veteran hurler came back surprisingly quickly and pitched very well. On March 22 Yankees hurler Joba Chamberlain dislocated his right ankle falling off a trampoline. Although expected to miss the entire season, Chamberlain returned in August to make 22 appearances.

Young Royals catcher Salvador Perez, who had just days before signed a five-year, $7 million contract extension, tore up his right knee during a bullpen session and underwent surgery on March 16, not returning to the lineup until late June.

Red Sox closer Andrew Bailey's 2012 season was essentially lost when he tore ligaments in his right thumb sometime during spring training—no one was even sure how it happened. After surgery on April 4, he appeared only 19 times all season.

The biggest news of the spring came on February 23 with the reversal of NL MVP Ryan Braun's positive PED test and 50-game suspension. [See Performance-Enhancing Drugs section on page 70.]

On March 2, MLB announced it would implement the extra Wild Card team in each league (as approved in the 2011 Collective Bargaining Agreement) in 2012. The immediate expansion of the Wild Card was somewhat surprising because it required a change in the 2012 postseason schedule. [See Postseason section on page 239.]

HALL OF FAME

At its annual gala on July 22, the Hall of Fame honored two popular National League infielders: Reds shortstop Barry Larkin and Cubs third baseman Ron Santo. Larkin was ticketed for immortality in January by the baseball writers; Santo received his bronze pass the previous December, courtesy of the new "Golden Era" version of the Veterans Committee.

In his third year of eligibility, Larkin was named on 86.4% of the BBWAA ballots, enjoying the largest year-over-year gain (24.3 percentage points) in support in the year of election since Herb Pennock in 1948. Larkin became the 297th member of the National Game's most exclusive club.

Jack Morris finished second with 66.7% in his 13th year of eligibility; Jeff Bagwell, 56.0% in his second year on the ballot; Lee Smith (50.6%, 10th year); Tim Raines (48.7%, fifth); Alan Trammell (36.8%, 11th); and Edgar Martinez (36.5%, third). No other candidate received one-quarter of the writers' vote. The sole "rookie" candidate to garner enough votes to remain eligible was Bernie Williams (9.6%). Among those failing to receive five percent support—thus removed from future consideration by the writers—was two-time AL MVP Juan Gonzalez.

A Cincinnati native, Larkin played shortstop from 1986–2004 for one team—his hometown Reds. The collegiate baseball All-American at Michigan was the fourth-overall pick in the 1985 June amateur draft; he spent a little over a year in the minors before making his big-league debut at age 22. Larkin won an NL MVP Award and captured three Gold Gloves and 12 All-Star nods. Aside from three games at second base in his first year, he never played another position in the field.

Larkin was an all-around talent who, despite never leading the league in any batting category, was a bona fide star for his whole career. The right-handed batter combined a discerning eye at the plate with good power for a shortstop as he hit for average, ran the bases well, and carried a solid glove. He was also a superb base stealer.

In 1990, when Cincinnati led the NL West from Opening Day onward on the way to the world championship, Larkin finished seventh in NL MVP balloting. He scored eight runs in the Reds' 10 October games that championship season, and he boasts a .338 BA and .862 OPS in four postseason series. In his MVP year in 1995, Larkin hit .319/.394/.492, stole 51 bases in 56 attempts, and scored 98 runs in 131 games while leading Cincy to the Central Division title and the NLCS. Though he was disabled 14 times in his 19-year career, Larkin finished with 2,340 hits, 1,329 runs, 198 home runs, 960 RBIs, and 379 stolen bases.

Ron Santo was posthumously inducted into the Hall of Fame along with Larkin. Many bittersweet tears accompanied Santo's widow's acceptance of the game's highest honor because of Santo's recent death in December 2010. Santo endured 30 years of hoping for his enshrinement, along with a goodly dose of punishment: In his first year on the BBWAA ballot in 1980, Santo received an astonishingly weak 3.9% of the vote and was removed from consideration until the rules were changed in 1985. His peak support was in 1998, when he received 43.1% of the ink-stained wretches' nods in his last hurrah on the BBWAA ballot. [See page 70 of the 2012 Emerald Guide for analysis of why it took so long for Santo to be enshrined.]

With the Cubs from 1960–1973, followed by one year with the White Sox before retiring, Santo was a durable star who was seriously underrated due to playing his peak years during the offensive Death Valley of the mid-1960s. Nonetheless, the right-handed slugger poled 342 career home runs, scored 1,138 times, and drove home 1,331 runs. He led the NL in walks four times and in on-base percentage twice.

Signed by Chicago out of his Seattle high school, Santo made his professional debut at Double A. A little more than a year later, he was in The Show for good at age 20. Not counting his partial rookie campaign, Santo averaged 156 games and 96 RBIs in 13 seasons on the North Side, taking home five Gold Gloves, nine All-Star selections, and twice finishing in the top five in MVP voting. His career batting line of .277/.362/.464 looks lackluster for a Hall of Famer, but Santo's Adjusted OPS was 23% above average. Considering that Santo was a Type I diabetic—one of the earliest pro athletes to surmount the disease—he fashioned an impressive career.

Sixteen years after his playing career ended, Santo returned to Wrigley Field to broadcast Cubs games. Working as an analyst for the next 20 years in the radio booth, Santo became a beloved figure—affectionately dubbed "This Old Cub" in the documentary film of the same name, produced by Santo's son and daughter-in-law. Unfortunately, his physical problems mounted and he died before ever sitting on the dais in Cooperstown.

Also feted during the Hall of Fame's special summer weekend were Ford C. Frick Award winner Tim McCarver and J.G. Taylor Spink Award winner Bob Elliott.

McCarver was only the second Frick winner whose career in the booth was served as an analyst and not as a lead voice. Unlike most previous Frick winners, both he and Tony Kubek (the first analyst so honored) worked primarily on television games and not on the radio. However, it was his extensive resume of national broadcasts—especially in October—that made McCarver the most celebrated analyst of his time on the airwaves. The voluble McCarver imparted his wisdom, insight, and often awful puns on Game of the Week telecasts, All-Star Game broadcasts, and postseason game marathons for five networks: NBC (1980), ABC (1984–1989), CBS (1990–1993), the Baseball Network (1994–1995), and Fox (1996 to date). In his 23 years of covering the Fall Classic, McCarver has already broadcast many more World Series games than anyone in baseball history, and he has won six Emmy Awards for Best Sportscaster/Analyst.

After his retirement as a player at the end of 1979, McCarver began his broadcasting career in 1980 with the Phillies (The ex-catcher, who made his big-league debut in 1959, would come out of retirement briefly in September 1980 to become a four-decade player.) After three seasons in the booth in Philadelphia, McCarver moved to Queens, where he broadcast Mets games for 16 years. A move to the Bronx to comment on Yankees games followed in 1999. McCarver wrapped up his career as a team broadcaster in 2002 with the Giants.

Elliott has written about the Canadian-American game for 34 seasons at the big-league level. Probably the most prominent scribe ever to regularly cover baseball in Canada—and no doubt the most humble—the native of Kingston, Ontario, began covering the Expos for the Ottawa Citizen in 1979, then switched to covering the Blue Jays for the Toronto Sun in 1987. He has been the Sun's baseball columnist for the past 22 years.

Elliott penned the definitive history of baseball in Canada in 2005's The Northern Game: Baseball the Canadian Way. In 2010, the Canadian Baseball Hall of Fame honored Elliott with its Jack Graney Award, given to media members for lifetime contributions to baseball in Canada. The announcement of his winning the Spink Award was followed by tributes from scores of veteran Canadian baseball writers, editors, and executives, as well as many others.

Deacon White, Hank O'Day, and Jacob Ruppert were elected to the Hall of Fame at the 2012 Winter Meetings by the Pre-Integration Committee. They will be posthumously inducted into baseball's shrine in July 2013.

White was one of baseball's earliest superstars as well as one of the most well-liked and widely admired players of the 19th century. A standout catcher and third baseman of the early professional era, he played with nine different clubs in three leagues from 1871–1890. He led the National Association in batting in 1875, then topped the young National League in batting with a .387 mark in 1877 as the first baseman of the pennant-winning Boston Red Stockings. Ten years later, as the oldest player in the league, White was a regular on the world champion Detroit Wolverines.

O'Day was one of the most famous umpires in baseball history, suiting up for more than 4,000 games, including 10 World Series. O'Day pitched in the majors from 1884–1890, playing a prominent role in the 1889 NL pennant race. His full-time umpiring career began in 1897 and lasted until 1927, with two years "off" to manage the Reds (1912) and Cubs (1914).

As co-owner of the New York Yankees from 1915–1923, and as sole owner until his death in January 1939, Jacob Ruppert was a pioneer in multiple ways as he built a second-rate franchise into the most famous and most dominant in the game. Along the way, he purchased Babe Ruth from the Red Sox, hired future Hall of Fame executive Ed Barrow away from the Red Sox, installed future Hall of Fame manager Miller Huggins in the Yanks' dugout, and built Yankee Stadium. Ruppert's Bronx Bombers won 10 AL pennants and seven World Series during his ownership.

The 2013 Spink and Frick Award winners were also announced at the Winter Meetings in December. They will be honored at the Hall of Fame's Awards Presentation in Cooperstown the day before the 2013 Hall of Fame induction ceremonies.

The late Tom Cheek, the voice of the Blue Jays who broadcast every Toronto game on radio from the club's debut in 1977 through June 2004, was the Frick honoree. Cheek missed his first Jays' game in 2004 when attending his father's funeral, then underwent emergency brain surgery in the middle of the season. He returned to the Blue Jays' mike later that season, but passed away in 2005.

Veteran scribe Paul Hagen copped the Spink Award after covering the National Game for almost four decades, mostly while based in Philadelphia. Currently a columnist for MLB.com, the hard-working Hagen was the national baseball writer for the Philadelphia Daily News for 10 seasons after spending 15 years as the Phillies' beat writer.

Every Hot Stove League enjoys its share of winter palaver about who will make it into the Hall of Fame, but speculation about the January 2013 election overflowed at the end of 2012. For the first time, superstars Barry Bonds, Sammy Sosa, and Roger Clemens were appearing on the writers' ballots, giving the august enfranchised members of the Baseball Writers' Association a chance to pass judgment on the careers of the most polarizing hitter and pitcher of the Steroids Era. The raging debate over their undeniable statistical merits—as well as their moral failings, both real and imagined—caused untold oceans of real and digital ink to be spilled during the prelude to the January 2013 election results announcement.

PERFORMANCE-ENHANCING DRUGS

The biggest stories of 2012 on Major League Baseball's PED front all involved Most Valuable Players: current, former, and All-Star Game MVPs. But the first PED lede of 2012 hit the wires on February 20 when the Athletics signed Manny Ramirez to a minor league contract, hoping the formerly fearsome slugger would be able to play his way back into shape. After serving his pending 50-game suspension, Ramirez played 17 games with Triple A Sacramento, hitting .302 with no home runs in 63 at-bats. At his request, Ramirez was released by the A's in June.

The first PED controversy broke on February 23 when 2011 NL MVP Ryan Braun's 50-game suspension was overturned. Arbitrator Shyam Das ruled that Braun's test was flawed in both process and execution, with his urine sample unattended for two days. Braun's defense was reportedly simple but effective, claiming that the procedures for handling the test sample had not been followed. In an unusual move, Major League Baseball immediately issued a statement saying it "vehemently disagrees with the decision rendered today." In May, MLB dismissed Das from his joint appointment as MLB's independent arbitrator, the role he had filled since 1999.

Braun adamantly proclaimed his innocence and cleverly manipulated the media, acting like a virtuous victim, though he reportedly never challenged the accuracy of the test results that showed a large amount of synthetic testosterone in his system.

This was the first time a positive test for an MLB player had ever been overruled and the penalty rescinded. The second instance soon followed when the 100-game suspension of Rockies catcher Eliezer Alfonzo, imposed in mid-September 2011, was rescinded due to similar procedural error. Alfonzo, on Colorado's Triple A roster when reinstated, was released by the Rockies in June without appearing in a 2012 game for the organization.

The retrial of superstar Roger Clemens, unlike the 2012 tempests swirling around Braun and Cabrera, seemed more denouement than climax. On June 18, after nine weeks in a federal courtroom, Clemens was acquitted by the District of Columbia jury on all six felony counts of perjury, making a false statement, and obstructing Congress. Incompetent prosecutors and unreliable witnesses destroyed what credibility the government's case might otherwise have had. Foremost among the unpersuasive was the prosecution's star witness Brian McNamee, Clemens' former personal trainer and chief accuser, as well as former strength coach for the Yankees and Blue Jays. The acquittal ended almost five years of legal maneuvering regarding the superstar pitcher's 2008 statements to Congress, including a 2011 mistrial.

In June, MLB and the players' union announced changes to their Joint Drug Prevention and Treatment Program, some resulting from the Braun tsimmis. Most of the changes came from normal negotiations over the complicated details that had been agreed to in principle during the 2011 Collective Bargaining Agreement process. The biggest change had been announced with the CBA in 2011: testing for hGH during the offseason (including spring training) and for reasonable cause, with further study of the issue of hGH testing during the season. Among the many other changes were creating expert panels to advise about Therapeutic Use Exemption (TUE) applications for ADD/ADHD and other medications, increasing the number of random tests, allowing for public disclosure of the specific substances triggering positive test results or discipline, and making players suspended during the offseason or prior to the All-Star break ineligible for the All-Star Game.

That last provision, unfortunately, did not save MLB from embarrassment on August 15 when 2012 All-Star Game MVP Melky Cabrera was suspended for 50 games after failing a July test due to elevated testosterone levels. A few days later, the New York Daily News broke a story that Cabrera had conspired to create a fake Web site that sold a non-existent product in a transparent attempt to cover his tracks.

The stench over Cabrera's malfeasance was such that San Francisco announced prior to the end of the regular season that they wouldn't add Cabrera to the club's postseason roster if they advanced to the NLCS (when he would become eligible). That despite the fact that Cabrera's .346 BA was tops in the NL during the regular season (it was second-highest in the league when he was suspended). With six years of Major League Service, Cabrera became a free-agent after the season and was signed by the Blue Jays in November. Toronto's offer of a two-year deal was unexpected; on the other hand, it was clear that, absent his suspension, Cabrera would have cashed in via a much bigger and far longer contract.

Cabrera wasn't the only active major leaguer to fail a drug test in 2012. Giants reliever Guillermo Mota was suspended for 100 games on May 7 (Clenbuterol). Unlike his teammate, however, Mota was welcomed back by San Fran when eligible for reinstatement in August and also pitched in the postseason. Veteran outfielder Marlon Byrd (Tamoxifen, June 25) and veteran pitcher Bartolo Colon (testosterone, August 22) each received a 50-game unpaid holiday. Byrd had been released by the Red Sox two weeks earlier; Colon was in the Athletics' rotation. Phillies rookie infielder Freddy Galvis was exiled for 50 games on June 19 (Clostebol). Highly regarded Padres rookie catcher Yasmani Grandal failed a testosterone test and was suspended on November 7. (Offseason suspensions are served at the start of the 2013 season.)

Phillies catcher Carlos Ruiz and Orioles infielder Ryan Adams were each hit with 25-game suspensions in November for amphetamines. (Players must fail two tests to be suspended for amphetamine usage.) Ruiz set career highs in most offensive categories and was an All-Star for the first time at age 33 in 2012. Adams was in Triple A on the Birds' 40-player ML roster.

MLB granted 119 TUEs in 2012, slightly more than the previous season. All but three were for ADD.

In the bush leagues, 100 players garnered 50-game suspensions for drug program violations in 2012, a huge increase from the 72 suspensions in 2011. The majority were for positive tests for PEDs, though a few players were suspended for refusing to take tests. Five suspensions (25 games each) were for undisclosed reasons.

Two former AL MVPs were also in the PED news in 2012. On the comedy front, Jose Canseco's plans to play in the Mexican League disintegrated quickly in March after he refused to take a drug test and reportedly admitted using testosterone—which the 47-year-old immediately and unconvincingly denied.

Mr. October, the 1973 AL MVP, also sparked controversy in July when he spoke frankly about PEDs. Reggie Jackson, the hero of the 1977 World Series now employed by the Yanks as a special advisor, told Sports Illustrated that, because Alex Rodriguez had used performance enhancers, it "does cloud some of his records." Jackson further opined that he didn't believe anybody associated with doping should get into baseball's Hall of Fame. New York quickly made Jackson apologize and told him to stay away from all team functions for a few weeks.

Outside the National Pastime, a week before Clemens and his defense team prevailed in court, another greater-than-life athlete and public figure faced a similar predicament when the US Anti-Doping Agency (USADA) accused cycling legend Lance Armstrong of using performance-enhancing drugs for much of his career, including while winning a record seven Tour de France races. USADA's extremely detailed dossier of supporting evidence seemed damning, and seemingly came out of the blue after a federal investigation into Armstrong was dropped in February 2012 without any charges being filed. Armstrong tried in court to get the USADA charges thrown out over jurisdictional issues, but after that legal stratagem failed, Armstrong chose not to further contest the charges and accepted a lifetime ban from cycling.

Before and after he was stripped of a chest-full of cycling trophies and medals, Armstrong mounted a vigorous PR campaign to defend his name and reputation. The analogy to Clemens' predicament was obvious: avoiding conviction on legal charges hadn't removed the taint from Armstrong's legacy. The relevance to MLB's situation was that a drumbeat of media reports of rumors, accusations, evidence, failed tests, and suspensions can destroy a sport by irreparably sullying its public image and alienating its fan base.

Whether the National Game will ever get to the same debilitated point in the US as cycling has fallen in Europe is doubtful, but the coming brouhaha over inducting known or suspected PED users into the Hall of Fame is sure to keep the pot boiling for years to come. Multiple reminders came late in the season when two Yankees stars were unfairly tarred with the broad brush of PED rumors, and when erstwhile Dodgers closer and 2003 NL Cy Young winner Eric Gagne alleged that 80% of his LA teammates were using PEDs.

In late August, on ESPN's First Take, Skip Bayless irresponsibly wondered aloud whether Jeter, amid a terrific season at age 38, might be "using something" (i.e., hGH). Bayless offered no evidence during or after the TV show, but the attitude that every player who is having a good year in his late 30s, or everyone who is making a comeback, or everybody who is enjoying a breakout season could be cheating undermines the confidence of the fans.

On September 20, Charlotte TV reporter Dan Tordjman tweeted that Robinson Cano had failed a PED test and a suspension would be announced within hours. His tweets included saying he "'could not confirm' the #Cano PED report," as well as "Just a rumor." The false and grossly unprofessional tweets about Cano—coming from such an unlikely source as a local reporter in North Carolina—would have been comical if they had not been quickly repeated by many others. In this case, the rumors were quickly denied, no one else came forward to offer evidence, and Tordjman was forced to apologize and make a donation to Cano's foundation. Shortly thereafter, he lost his job. But how many fans heard the rumor and not the apology?

Gagne's September allegations could not be verified, but certainly the ex-pitcher had an incentive to exaggerate the extent of PED usage among the Dodgers since he himself had admitted two years earlier to using Human Growth Hormone. Gagne could have been telling the truth, exaggerating the facts, or lying … or he could have been telling what he believed to be true, suspecting players of using who might not have been. Regardless, Gagne's allegations, as well as the idiotic comments by Bayless and the unethical tweets by Tordjman, damage the credibility of the game.

NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENTS

Miguel Cabrera's Triple Crown (44/139/.330) was the biggest individual achievement of 2012, marking the first time in 45 years that a hitter had led either league in home runs, RBIs, and batting average. The Detroit slugger bested the AL runner-up in BA by four points, in homers by one, and in ribbies by 11. The Tigers, as well as many others, were convinced that the Triple Crown made Cabrera a no-brainer for the MVP, but others disagreed—generating a controversy that raged for months. [See Postseason Awards section on page 89.]

Otherwise, while overall offense increased slightly in 2012, pitchers once again dominated the list of the year's notable performances. A record seven no-hitters were hurled, including a combined operation that employed six pitchers and became only the second combination no-hitter to need more than four arms to complete.

Mariners starter Kevin Millwood was bidding for his second career no-hitter on June 8 against the Dodgers when he strained his groin, forcing him to leave the game after six innings. Five Seattle relievers pitched the final three frames.

Three of the no-no's were also perfect games: Phil Humber of the White Sox on April 21 against the Mariners, Matt Cain of the Giants on June 13 over the Astros, and Felix Hernandez of the M's on August 15 over the Rays. It was the most perfectos ever in one summer: only in 2010 had MLB recorded more than one perfect game.

New York's Johan Santana crafted the franchise's first no-hitter in the 50th year of the Mets' existence, on June 1 against St. Louis. His feat left San Diego as the only one of MLB's 30 teams that has never enjoyed a no-hitter. The remaining no-hitters were hurled by the Angels' Jered Weaver on May 2 over the Twins, and by the Reds' Homer Bailey on September 28 against the Pirates.

Nine one-hitters were posted, including the first-ever consecutive one-hit jobs by NL Cy Young winner R.A. Dickey of the Mets on June 13 and 18.

New York's no-longer ageless Mariano Rivera extended his MLB records for saves and games finished before being lost for the season to the Yankees due to an injury at the end of April. Detroit pitcher Doug Fister set an AL record when he struck out nine consecutive Kansas City batters on September 26.

Josh Hamilton turned in the second-most significant offensive feat of the year, slamming four home runs against the Orioles at Camden Yards on May 8. The Rangers' slugger also doubled, drove in eight runs, and set an AL record with 18 total bases that day. It was the first four-dinger game in The Show since 2003.

Tigers rookie Quintin Berry set an AL record when he stole 21 bases without being caught, and Boston DH David Ortiz extended his career records for most home runs and most RBIs by a designated hitter.

In the field, Derek Jeter of the Yankees extended his record for most hits by a shortstop, while Omar Vizquel of the Blue Jays extended his records for most games and most seasons at shortstop.

On the other side of the ledger, Athletics hitters set an AL record by whiffing 1,387 times in one year, and Mariners hitters tied an MLB record when they fanned 20 times against the Angels on September 25. Finally, the Pirates extended their "Oh, No" record for futility by playing their 20th consecutive season with a losing record.

ALL-STAR GAME

St. Louis skipper Tony La Russa, who had retired after the Cardinals' triumph in the 2011 World Series, agreed in January to manage the National League squad in the 2012 Midsummer Classic at the behest of Commissioner Bud Selig. The decision would become controversial, at least from the point of view of some of La Russa's former NL Central rivals—both the Reds and Brewers thought that La Russa snubbed their stars when making his selections. Milwaukee thought starter Zack Greinke deserved a spot on the NL team, and Cincinnati thought second baseman Brandon Phillips and starting pitcher Johnny Cueto both should have been named All-Stars. Reds skipper Dusty Baker was particularly incensed, and all but accused La Russa of deliberately slighting Phillips and Cueto because of their roles in a 2010 brawl between the Redlegs and the Redbirds.

Fans voted on MLB.com and in ballparks in huge numbers for their favorite players, with a new high of more than 11 million casting votes for Texas outfielder Josh Hamilton. The senior circuit All-Star roster featured the All-Star game's oldest player in the person of Atlanta's Chipper Jones, 40, as well as the youngest in the person of Washington's Bryce Harper—who at 19 became the youngest position player in All-Star Game history. It was the eighth and final All-Star appearance for Jones, who announced in March he would retire at season's end. The Braves' slugger received a thunderous ovation when he was announced in pregame ceremonies, and later singled in his final All-Star at-bat as a pinch-hitter in the sixth inning.

The All-Star Game itself, held at Kansas City's Kauffman Stadium, was lackluster, as the NL beat up on Detroit ace Justin Verlander, pounding the 2011 AL MVP and Cy Young winner for five runs in the first inning. Verlander began by striking out Carlos Gonzalez, but Melky Cabrera singled and Ryan Braun doubled him in to plate the first run. Verlander then fanned Votto before walking the next two batters; Pablo Sandoval's subsequent triple began the rout. The NL finished the scoring in the fourth on a single by Matt Holliday after Rafael Furcal's triple, followed by a two-run homer by Cabrera off of Matt Harrison. Cabrera was later named the game's Most Valuable Player.

American League bats managed only six hits against 11 NL hurlers, creating only three baserunners in the final four innings. The AL's best chance to make any noise came in the bottom of the fifth, when singles by David Ortiz and Mike Napoli and a two-out walk by Asdrubal Cabrera loaded the bases for pinch-hitter Ian Kinsler. But Clayton Kershaw induced Kinsler to fly to left to end the threat. San Francisco's Matt Cain started and pitched the first two innings to earn the victory in the star-spangled, 8–0 whitewash.

PENNANT RACES

The 2012 regular season began in Japan in late March, when capacity crowds at the Tokyo Dome saw Oakland and Seattle split two games. Hometown fans were particularly delighted to see Ichiro Suzuki, their expatriate superstar, in person again, and were even more thrilled when he collected four hits in the first game.

Injuries to two key players in April caused Giants fans to fear a repeat of 2011, when injuries to superstar Buster Posey and slugger Pablo Sandoval derailed San Francisco's bid to repeat as world champions. Closer Brian Wilson, who led the NL with 48 saves during the club's march to the 2010 title, blew out his elbow on April 12 in only his second game of the season. The bearded fan-favorite would undergo reconstructive surgery and miss the rest of the season. At the end of April, Pablo Sandoval broke the hamate bone in his left wrist, forcing "Kung Fu Panda" to the sidelines for five weeks. (Sandoval had undergone similar surgery a year earlier on the hamate in his other wrist.) During the slugger's absence, the Giants fell well behind the red-hot Dodgers in the early going in the NL West.

Sparked by Matt Kemp, who hit .417 with 12 homers in April, LA on May 27 boasted the best record in baseball at 32–15. After going 10–10 during the next three weeks, Los Angeles still had the best record in the majors and led San Francisco by five games. Then the wheels fell off the trolley as the Dodgers were swept by the Athletics, lost two of three to the Angels, and were shut out three consecutive times by the Giants, to drop into a tie for first with their archrivals.

Heady with optimism, the well-heeled owners of the Dodgers authorized a huge spending spree as the club made deals for high-profile veterans with hefty paychecks. The first move was signing Andre Ethier to a five-year, $85 million contract extension in mid-June, locking up the outfielder through 2017 (with a vesting option for 2018). In late July, LA traded for infielder Hanley Ramirez of the foundering Marlins. A month later, the Dodgers made a huge deal with the imploding Red Sox in which LA received first baseman Adrian Gonzalez, starting pitcher Josh Beckett, and outfielder Carl Crawford. Despite these acquisitions, however, Los Angeles slipped out of first permanently on August 20, after a month of touch-and-go with the Giants.

The Giants were able to keep pace in the West, thanks in part to Melky Cabrera's sizzling performance. The outfielder lashed 51 hits in May, tying the club record. In July, Cabrera was the MVP of the All-Star Game. However, the NL batting leader wasn't in the lineup for the stretch drive after being suspended on August 15 for failing a PED test. Even without the NL batting leader, though, the Giants went 30–14 after August 15, with Posey enjoying a monster second half, batting .385 and slugging .646 after the All-Star break. In the end, San Fran wound up winning the NL West by a comfortable eight games over LA.

The rest of the West ranged from mediocre to bad, with the third-place Diamondbacks playing .500 ball and the fourth-place Padres salvaging a respectable record after a dreadful 7–17 April. The Rockies finished last, losing 98 games and reorganizing their front office in response to the crisis.

The Reds claimed the NL Central crown despite an injury to Joey Votto, who twisted a knee sliding into third base in late June. Votto attempted to play through the injury, but eventually had surgery July 17 and was out until September. Brandon Phillips (.352 BA, .946 OPS from July 19 to August 11) and Ryan Ludwick (.364 BA, 1.143 OPS from July 21 to August 25) filled in admirably. The biggest factor was that Cincinnati's starting rotation remained healthy all season. The five who began the year in the rotation (Johnny Cueto, Mat Latos, Homer Bailey, Bronson Arroyo, and Mike Leake) made all but one of the team's 162 starts; the only exception came in the second game of an August 18 doubleheader, when new rules allowed the Reds to call up an extra pitcher for that game only.

Milwaukee, the defending NL Central champions, never really recovered from the loss of Prince Fielder to free-agency and spent most of the season in fourth before a late-season surge bumped them up to third. In St. Louis, Carlos Beltran clubbed 10 home runs in May, helping the Redbirds stay at or near the top of the Central standings. However, once the veteran outfielder cooled off, the Cardinals spent the middle of the season in third place before climbing into second in late August and claiming the NL's second Wild Card berth with 88 wins.

For much of the season, the Pirates played better than the team had in the last two decades. Led by Andrew McCutchen, Pittsburgh appeared on-track to not just a winning record, but also to make the postseason. From May 9 to August 3 (75 games), McCutchen hit .397 with 21 homers, powering the surprising Bucs into first place at the All-Star break. But McCutchen returned to earth as the Pirates skidded the rest of the way, playing .333 ball and falling to fourth place. It was the franchise's 20th consecutive losing season, extending its record for futility among North American sports leagues.

Playing under new management (with Houston also under new ownership), the fifth-place Cubs and sixth-place Astros suffered through disastrous seasons, finishing 2012 as the only MLB teams to lose more than 100 games. Before the end of the season, each team was being disassembled and completely overhauled.

All five members of the NL East Division were above .500 at the end of May—even the Mets, expected to contend by no one. Knuckleballer R.A. Dickey single-handedly kept New York afloat in the first half, fluttering his way to a 12–1 record at the All-Star break that included a streak of five straight starts from May 27 to June 18 in which he did not allow an earned run. Dickey's last two starts in that stretch included back-to-back one-hitters. New York quickly fell out of contention after the midsummer break, with Dickey going 8–5 following his first All-Star appearance. The Phillies, winners of the previous five NL East flags, faded quickly after June 1, losing nine of their next 10. The Marlins followed suit, dropping into fourth place in mid-June, which precipated a purge of veterans in late July that was completed after the season.

Philadelphia's decline left Washington and Atlanta to fight for supremacy in the NL East. The Braves stayed reasonably close for most of the season, but the Nationals dominated the division, thanks to the sensational return of Stephen Strasburg and the hot hitting of rookie outfielder Bryce Harper. Washington won 98 games, best in MLB in 2012, winning the division by four games.

Strasburg, who missed the bulk of 2011 after Tommy John surgery, allowed just four runs in 32 innings in April, but his torrid start only increased the attention on the Nats' controversial decision to limit their callow ace to about 160 innings during 2012. The Nationals announced their plan during spring training, and steadfastly refused to change it, even when it became apparent that the club was going to the postseason. GM Mike Rizzo pulled the plug on Strasburg's season on September 7, after he gave up six hits and five earned runs in three innings to the Marlins. Strasburg had been scheduled for one more start, and the competitive right-hander was upset that he wasn't allowed to make it, but the team stood firm. That decision was made easier because Washington was leading Atlanta by 6.5 games at the time.

Strasburg shared media attention all year with 19-year-old Bryce Harper, the first overall selection in the 2010 draft. Harper made his major league debut on April 28, but was not an instant success. In his first 95 games (371 at-bats), Harper batted just .245 with 10 homers and slugged only .396. The impressive rookie rewarded the team's patience with a strong finish, hitting .327 with 12 homers and a 1.045 OPS from August 17 to the end of the regular season.

The addition of a second Wild Card team in each league brought a little extra drama to the NL. The Braves finished second in the East, six games ahead of any other non-division winner. Meanwhile, the Cardinals were 4.5 games ahead of the Dodgers on September 25, so even though LA won seven of its last eight, the secondary Wild Card contest generated only minimal drama.

In the American League, virtually every prognosticator with a pulse picked Detroit to run away with the AL Central title. After all, the Bengals had won 95 games in 2011 before they added free-agent slugger Prince Fielder in the offseason. Nevertheless, the surprising play of Cleveland and Chicago meant that the Tigers had to work hard to fulfill the predictions.

Cleveland played well and benefited from a little luck in the early competition, as the Indians were a half-game ahead of the White Sox and 3.5 up on Detroit on June 23—despite being outscored by 36 runs in their first 70 games. After an 11–0 drubbing by the Twins on July 27, however, the Tribe sank like a rock to fourth in the Central, losing 27 of its next 32 games.

Chicago thrived under new manager Robin Ventura, who was a steady and calming influence after eight years of Ozzie Guillen's histrionics. Chicago grabbed the division lead on May 29, holding it for all but seven days until September 26, when the club ran out of gas, dropping 11 of its final 15 and finishing three back of Detroit.

The Tigers scuffled badly in the first two months of the campaign and were three games below .500, 4.5 games out on July 3, as rumblings about manager Jim Leyland's job security intensified. But the high-powered Detroit offense finally shifted into high gear, saving Leyland's job and the season. Detroit had been outscored by 11 runs at that point, but from July 4 to the last day of the season, the Bengals plated 67 more mates than their opponents as they went 49–32 to win the division.

The Twins staggered out of the gate and spent most of the summer in last place, where they finished. Minnesota's pitching staff was in shambles: only one pitcher made as many as 20 starts, and only one hurler won more than six games. Kansas City ended the season in third place, its highest finish since 2003, mostly because of the collapse of the Indians and Twins.

Defending AL champion Texas, buoyed by Josh Hamilton's slugging, seemed to be in control of the AL West all year after taking 12 of their first 14. Hamilton clubbed nine home runs in one week, including four in one game against Baltimore on May 8. Texas led the West by at least three games from April 17 until the final four days of the year. The Rangers were still in control after beating the Athletics, 9–7, on September 27, putting them four games ahead with six to play. But the Rangers lost two of three to the Angels while the A's were sweeping a three-game series against the Mariners. That set up a season-ending showdown in Oakland, where the hometown nine swept three from Texas to claim the division and leave the disappointed Rangers with a Wild Card berth.

Oakland's division title was particularly impressive, considering that the Athletics were 13 games behind on June 30. The turnaround began after the A's had dropped the first three games of a four-game set in Arlington; they then reversed course, beat the Rangers in the last game, and went on to win 14 of their next 16. A critical factor in Oakland's resurgence was the play of Cuban defector Yoenis Cespedes, signed as spring training was beginning.

The signing of several high-profile free agents, including Albert Pujols, raised expectations in Anaheim for the 2012 campaign, with many expecting the Angels to run away with the AL West. Pujols, however, had severe problems adjusting to his new league, as he hit below .200 for the first five weeks and didn't hit a home run until May 6. Because of the blistering start by Texas, Los Angeles found itself 6.5 games out on April 23. The Angels never recovered, with much of the blame landing on Pujols. Though the former NL superstar dramatically picked up his pace, overall he had the worst season in his storied career, posting career lows in BA, slugging, and on-base. Not even the Herculean efforts of rookie Mike Trout, who hit .326 with a .963 OPS and led the AL in runs (129 in 139 games) and stolen bases, despite spending the first three weeks of the season in the minors, could elevate the Angels above third place.

Although its .463 winning percentage was by far the best for a last-place team in 2012, Seattle was never a factor in the West, coming in fourth for the fourth time in the last five years.

In the AL East, the Yankees led the Rays by six games and the Orioles by seven on August 17, yet the Bombers had to wait until the last day of the regular season to clinch the division. Though New York finished with the best record in the AL, the road to October wasn't without its challenges—among them closer Mariano Rivera tearing his ACL while shagging balls during batting practice on May 3 and missing the rest of the season.

In New England, things went from very bad in 2011 to much, much worse in 2012. Hired in part to instill a culture of discipline to the Sox' country clubhouse, new Red Sox skipper Bobby Valentine generated controversy from the start. He started a feud with Yankee manager Joe Girardi, who called an end to a spring game that was tied after nine innings. Then, with the season barely two weeks old, he publicly called out Kevin Youkilis, questioning the popular third sacker's heart and dedication. Bobby V. quarreled with the Tampa Bay coaching staff, complained about umpires when things didn't go right, and even ignored instructions from Boston's medical staff regarding an injured player. Carl Crawford sat out the first half of the season with a bum elbow, which would require reconstructive surgery following the season. Doctors told Valentine that Crawford should not play more than four consecutive days when he returned to the lineup in July, but Valentine immediately started him six days in a row. It all added up to a horrid season that saw Boston win just 69 games, its worst record since 1965.

The collapse of the BoSox gave hope to the Rays and the upstart Orioles, thriving under Buck Showalter. Nobody expected anything of Baltimore, which won only 69 games in 2011 and hadn't enjoyed a winning season since 1997. The O's fought tooth-and-nail with the Yanks and Rays in the first half, even spending a handful of days alone in first place; however, a rough stretch in June when Baltimore lost 16 of 23 dropped the Birds to 10 games back on July 17.

While just a half game out of a tie for the second Wild Card spot in the AL, the Orioles revived themselves and made a run at the division title. A five-game streak, coinciding with New York's losing four of five, cut the deficit to six games in less than a week and, by picking up a game here and a game there, Baltimore found itself three behind on September 1. Three days later, the O's were tied for first following a sweep of Toronto. Though Baltimore never could claim sole possession of first place, it was tied with New York headed into the final three days of the regular season. The O's lost two of three to the Rays, though, while the Yankees swept the Red Sox, consigning Baltimore to a Wild Card berth after it finished tied with Texas with 93 wins.

The efficient and dangerous Rays were never out of sight of first place in 2012, but Tampa Bay settled quietly for third place in both the East and the Wild Card. The Blue Jays, who played sub-.400 ball in the second half, finished fourth for the fifth consecutive season, saved from last place by the collapse of the Red Sox.

POSTSEASON

MLB's 2012 season started with a resounding cheer for the new Wild Card play-in games, continued with down-to-the-wire excitement in the Division Series, then petered out with a chilly whimper in the World Series as San Francisco swept Detroit. Detroit, with only the seventh-best record in the American League, had advanced to the Fall Classic by knocking out the two other AL division winners.

For the first time, all four Division Series went to the limit. That was the high point of MLB's October action, however, as the Yankees, with the AL's best record, were swept by the Tigers in the ALCS. The NLCS went to the seventh game, yet saw only two contests decided by fewer than five runs as the defending world champion Cardinals were eliminated. St. Louis, who would have gone home after the regular season if not for the new Wild Card berth, bested Atlanta in the first-ever NL Wild Card game.

The Nationals, who were the only team in baseball to play .600 ball, fell to the Cardinals in the Division Series in the franchise's first October action since the relocation to Washington in 2005. The NL Central champion Reds won their first postseason game since 1990 but succumbed to the Giants in the Division Series.

A year after the release of the hit movie Moneyball, Billy Beane's Athletics returned to the postseason after a five-year drought. After two consecutive AL pennants, Texas lost the AL West title to resurgent Oakland, then was stunned by Baltimore in the inaugural AL Wild Card game. However, the two Cinderella teams heard the clock strike midnight in the Division Series, as the Yankees outlasted the Orioles and the Tigers beat the A's.

Because the 2012 postseason schedule had been locked in before the Collective Bargaining Agreement was approved in November 2011, the new Wild Card games could not be added in 2012 without rearranging the Division Series. Thus, for the first year only of the expanded Wild Card, the Division Series were scheduled in the "2–3" format that had been used from 1995–1997, instead of the "2–2–1" format implemented in 1998, saving travel days after the Wild Card games and after Game 4 of the Division Series. For 2013 and beyond, the Division Series will revert to having the team with the home-field advantage host Games 1, 2, and 5.

WILD CARD

As expected, both inaugural Wild Card play-in games generated a lot of interest. In the National League, the host Braves jumped ahead 2–0 over the visiting Cardinals in the second on a two-run blast by David Ross. St. Louis scored three in the fourth, thanks largely to a throwing error by Chipper Jones that allowed two unearned runs to score. The Redbirds added another run in the sixth on a solo homer by Matt Holliday before putting the game away with two more unearned runs in the seventh.

Atlanta saw plenty of chances as it nicked starter and winner Kyle Lohse and his five relievers for 12 hits while stranding 12 runners, including seven in the final three frames. In the final game of his 19-year career, Chipper Jones grounded out with two on in the seventh. An inning later, Michael Bourn struck out with the bases loaded, and Dan Uggla grounded out to end the game with runners on second and third in the ninth. The 6–3 final score propelled the defending world champions into the postseason proper.

In the American League Wild Card game, Baltimore and Texas both scored single runs in the first inning. The visiting Orioles got on the board when Nate McLouth reached to start the game on an error by first baseman Michael Young, stole second, and then rode home on a single by J.J. Hardy. The Rangers replied in the bottom of the frame as leadoff hitter Ian Kinsler walked before Elvis Andrus's single, putting runners on first and third with none out for Josh Hamilton. However, Hamilton, who struggled mightily in the second half of the regular season, grounded into a double play, giving the Rangers one tally before Adrian Beltre flied out to end the early excitement.

That would be the best chance for the defending AL champions, who were stymied by starter and winner Joe Saunders of the O's for that solitary run in 5.2 innings. Meanwhile, the Birds added single runs in the sixth and seventh off Rangers starter and loser Yu Darvish before plating two more in the ninth off closer Joe Nathan to run the Baltimore lead to 5–1, the final score. Texas loaded the bases with two out in the bottom of the ninth, but David Murphy flied to left to send the underdog Orioles into the AL Division Series.

NATIONAL LEAGUE DIVISION SERIES

Cincinnati's starting pitchers were as healthy in the regular season as they could be, as none of the five missed a start all year. That run ended in San Francisco in the bottom of the first inning of Game 1 of the Division Series when Johnny Cueto pulled a muscle while warming up before the game. The Reds' ace lasted only six pitches before exiting to the trainer's room. Manager Dusty Baker called on Sam LeCure, who retired the two batters he faced in the first and pitched out of trouble in the second.

The Reds grabbed the lead in the third on a two-run homer by Brandon Phillips; Jay Bruce's blast leading off the fourth put Cincy up 3–0. Buster Posey homered leading off the bottom of the sixth to get the Giants on the scoreboard, but San Francisco could manage no more until the Reds had added two more in the ninth. The Giants scored a run in the bottom of the ninth, making the final 5–2, due to wild Cincinnati closer Aroldis Chapman, who walked two and threw two errant pitches.

Game 2 was all Cincinnati. Bronson Arroyo allowed just one hit and a walk in seven innings as the Reds' bats pounded out 13 hits in a 9–0 whitewash. Joey Votto collected three base hits and scored twice as Ryan Ludwick homered and Ryan Hanigan drove in three.

In Game 3 in the Queen City, Homer Bailey allowed only one hit and a walk in seven innings, leaving with the game tied at 1. Giants starter Ryan Vogelsong was as effective if not as sharp—the Reds scored one in the first, but could have had more had Brandon Phillips not gotten overly aggressive on the basepaths. Phillips singled and stole second, but he was thrown out trying to advance to third when a pitch got away from Posey. Zack Cozart walked and Ludwick and Bruce singled, tallying a solitary run.

The Giants tied it in the third without getting a hit on a hit batsman, a walk, a sacrifice bunt, and an Angel Pagan sacrifice fly. The score remained knotted until extra innings. Posey and Hunter Pence singled leading off the top of the tenth, but Jonathan Broxton fanned two before the winning run scored on an error by Reds third baseman Scott Rolen. Final: 2–1, San Francisco.

The visitors wound up with a fairly easy 8–3 win in Game 4. Cincinnati starter Mike Leake coughed up a homer to Pagan leading off the game, but the hometown nine tied it in the bottom of the first on a bases-loaded walk. San Francisco took the lead again in the second on a two-run blast by Gregor Blanco. Consecutive doubles by Joaquin Arias and Pagan started the fifth, and a sacrifice fly by Pablo Sandoval made the score 5–2. The Giants made the final score 8–3 on an RBI double by Marco Scutaro and a two-run bomb by Sandoval in the seventh.

Cincinnati starter and loser Mat Latos came unglued in the final game of the series in the fifth, allowing six quick runs, the last scoring on a grand slam by Posey. The Reds replied with a pair on a Phillips double in the fifth and Ludwick's solo round-tripper in the sixth to cut the lead in half. With one out in the ninth, a walk and two singles made it 6–4, making slugger Jay Bruce the potential winning run. Giants closer Sergio Romo engaged in a tense duel with Bruce, who fouled off six two-strike pitches before flying out. Rolen then struck out meekly to end Cincinnati's season.

In the opener of the other NLDS, the Strasburg-less Nationals emerged a winner —but just barely—in the Montreal-Washington franchise's first postseason game since 1981. The visiting Nats drew first blood in the second on a leadoff walk to Adam LaRoche and two singles. St. Louis led 2–1 after plating a pair of runs in the bottom of the second inning on four walks, a wild pitch, and a sacrifice fly. The Cardinals had a chance to break the game open in the seventh after loading the bases with none out. Winner Ryan Mattheus relieved Craig Stammen and saved the day by getting Allen Craig to force a runner at home on a grounder, and then induced Yadier Molina to ground into a double play. Washington took the lead the next inning on a single by Tyler Moore, which drove in two unearned runs. What proved to be the winning runs were set up on an error by St. Louis shortstop Pete Kozma.

The Cardinals routed the Nationals in Games 2 and 3, 12–4 and 8–0. St. Louis clubbed four homers in the second contest, including two by Carlos Beltran that drove in three. Lance Lynn picked up the win after providing much needed relief of starter Jaime Garcia, who left after two innings due to a shoulder injury. Two days later, the Redbirds ruined the first postseason game in the nation's capital in 79 years as Chris Carpenter and a trio of bullpenners collaborated in a seven-hit shutout. Matt Holliday and Kozma combined to drive in five of the Redbirds' eight runs.

Game 4 was the nail-biter of the series. Hometown Washington managed just two safeties through the first eight frames, but stayed in the hunt as its hurlers surrendered only three. LaRoche homered leading off the bottom of the second to give the Nationals a brief 1–0 advantage, but an error by Ian Desmond in the top of the third allowed the Cardinals to tie it with an unearned run. The status quo reigned until the last of the ninth, as neither team could mount any serious threat. Jayson Werth led off against St. Louis reliever Lynn, with the matchup resulting in one of the most dramatic moments of the 2012 postseason. Werth took the first two pitches for strikes, then watched two out of the strike zone even the count. After fouling off the next six offerings by Lynn, Werth took another ball and fouled yet another pitch before blasting the 13th pitch of the at-bat well over the left field fence for the game-winner.

The Nationals looked to be sitting pretty at home in the decider after getting three in the first and three in the third to go ahead, 6–0, as no team had ever come back from six runs down in the deciding game of a postseason series. Ryan Zimmerman smacked a two-run homer in the first, while Bryce Harper and Mike Morse both went deep in the third. Washington still held a two-run advantage going into the final frame, though starter Gio Gonzalez had wild pitched in a run and walked in another in the fifth, and the Cardinals had also plated single runs in the fourth, seventh, and eighth. Beltran led off the top of the ninth with a double, but Drew Storen retired the next two before loading the bases with walks to Molina and David Freese. The Cards tied the fifth game with Daniel Descalso's grounder off the glove of Desmond at short. Descalso proceeded to steal second before he and Freese scored the go-ahead runs on Kozma's single to right. Closer Jason Motte, who threw 21 pitches and gave up a run in the bottom of the eighth, followed with a 1-2-3 ninth to send St. Louis to the NL Championship Series for the second consecutive year.

AMERICAN LEAGUE DIVISION SERIES

The good news for Oakland was that Coco Crisp led off Game 1 of the ALDS against the Tigers with a home run off Detroit's Justin Verlander. The bad news was that the Detroit ace recovered quickly, and Crisp's solo homer was all the visiting Athletics would get the rest of the way. Verlander limited Oakland to just two more hits while striking out 11 in his seven innings, though he did walk four.

The Bengals tied it in the bottom of the first when Austin Jackson doubled and advanced to third on an infield single by Quintin Berry, scoring when Miguel Cabrera grounded into a double play. Detroit took the lead in the third on an unearned run and added an insurance run in the fifth on a homer by Alex Avila. Detroit pitching, including relievers Joaquin Benoit and Jose Valverde, was so dominant that Oakland didn't get a runner past first base after Stephen Drew doubled with one out in the third.

Game 2 also went to Detroit, though the Tigers needed some late-inning heroics. Each team scored once in the third, though the A's wasted a chance to get more, as Crisp was thrown out at home trying to score on a one-out single by Brandon Moss. The game remained knotted until the seventh, when Oakland grabbed the lead as Seth Smith walked leading off, advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt, and scored on a single by Chad Pennington.

Detroit regained the lead immediately, scoring two unearned runs when Crisp bobbled a looper in shallow center with two out in the seventh. Oakland returned the favor in the eighth, though, when Benoit wild pitched a run home before Josh Reddick hit a solo shot to right. Delmon Young and Jhonny Peralta singled to start the bottom of the eighth for Detroit, with pinch-runners for both advancing on a sac bunt. After Berry struck out, A's reliever Ryan Cook threw away his first pitch to Alex Avila, allowing the tying run to score. Oakland failed to score despite putting two aboard with two out in the ninth, giving Detroit the winning opportunity when Omar Infante singled with one down—and later scored—on a bases-loaded sacrifice fly by Don Kelly.

Brett Anderson and three relievers kept Oakland in the series with masterful pitching in Game 3. The quartet, which included Ryan Cook, Sean Doolittle and Grant Balfour, limited Detroit to just four hits—only two after the second inning—as they whitewashed the Tigers, 2–0. The hometown nine scored a run in the bottom of the first on a single by Yoenis Cespedes. A leaping catch by center fielder Crisp, who robbed Prince Fielder of a home run in the top of the second, kept the Athletics in front. Neither team threatened again until Seth Smith homered in the fifth with what would be the game's final run. Detroit managed but a one-out single in the ninth that was erased by a game-ending double play.

In Game 4, the Tigers grabbed the lead in the third when Austin Jackson singled in a run, tallying another the next inning on a leadoff circuit clout by Fielder. Oakland cut the lead to one in the sixth when Stephen Drew doubled in Crisp with none out, but Detroit relievers Octavio Dotel and Phil Coke each got an out to end the inning without further damage. Detroit headed to the bottom of the ninth with Valverde on the mound, protecting a 3–1 lead as Tigers fans everywhere started their celebration. But the Bengals' closer surrendered the lead in a heartbeat as Reddick singled, Josh Donaldson doubled, and Smith doubled them both home to tie the contest. Valverde rallied briefly, retiring the next two hitters, but Crisp then grounded the first pitch he saw into right to plate the winning run.

Stunned, the Tigers turned to Verlander in Game 5, and the right-handed savior proved more than equal to the task. Crafting a dominant performance that reminded everyone why he had won the 2011 AL MVP and Cy Young awards, Verlander went the distance, punching out 11 Athletics hitters while allowing only four hits and a walk. Detroit scored two in the third inning on two hits and two wild pitches by Jarrod Parker, then added four more in the seventh on four hits, a walk, a hit batter, and an Oakland error. The only time Verlander faced a threat was in the bottom of the eighth inning, when Donaldson led off with a single and Chad Pennington singled two outs later. But Verlander got Crisp to ground out to end the eighth, then retired the side in order in the ninth to promote the Tigers into the ALCS, 6–0.

The first game of the Baltimore–New York ALDS was the only one of the series decided by more than two runs, but that doesn't mean it wasn't exciting. Although the Yankees won, 7–2, the game was tied going into the ninth. The Yankees posted single runs in the first and fourth, with the Orioles getting two in the bottom of the third. The score remained tied at 2 until Russell Martin smacked a home run leading off the top of the ninth. New York added another run on consecutive singles by Raul Ibanez, Derek Jeter, and Ichiro Suzuki. Alex Rodriguez struck out, beginning his 2012 postseason agony, before Robinson Cano doubled in two and Nick Swisher brought home the game's final run with a sacrifice fly.

The Orioles evened the series the next day behind a stingy bullpen and a two-out rally in the third inning. The Yankees scored an unearned run in the top of the first on an error by Baltimore first baseman Mark Reynolds, but the Orioles claimed the lead in the third, scoring twice after the first two batters had been retired. Two singles and a walk loaded the bases for Chris Davis, who lined one to right to make it 2–1. The Orioles added a run in the sixth on a double by Matt Wieters and a single by Reynolds, then gave it back in the top of the seventh when Jeter singled in Eduardo Nunez. The Yanks placed runners on second and third with two out later that inning, but Brian Matusz induced Swisher to fly to left to end the threat, and New York failed to threaten in the eighth or ninth.

The next two games were good old-fashioned pitchers' duels, with both games going into overtime in the Bronx. The Yankees squeaked out a 3–2 win in Game 3 after rallying for the tying run in the ninth. Baltimore led 2–1 headed into the bottom of the ninth, thanks to Manny Machado's leadoff homer in the fifth. With one out and nobody on in the bottom of the ninth, Yankees skipper Joe Girardi surprised almost everyone when he sent Ibanez to hit for three-time AL MVP Rodriguez, even though the superstar third baseman was a horrid 1-for-12 with seven strikeouts to that point. The move paid off when Ibanez blasted a home run over the wall in right to tie the affair. Three innings later, leading off the 12th, Ibanez achieved instant cult hero status among Yankees fans by pounding the first pitch he saw from Matusz to win the game.

Baltimore staved off elimination the next afternoon by triumphing in an equally thrilling contest. Nate McLouth homered leading off the top of the fifth for Baltimore, but the Yankees tied it in the sixth on an infield grounder. New York put two runners on base in both the seventh and eighth, but failed to score, sending the game into extra innings. Neither team threatened until the 13th, when Machado doubled leading off. One out later, J.J. Hardy drove in the game-winner with a double to left. Orioles closer Jim Johnson retired the pinstriped side in order in the bottom of the inning to save the game, 2–1.

New York starter CC Sabathia was brilliant in the decider, limiting Baltimore to just one hit and a walk in seven innings. While the O's Jason Hammel retired the first 12 batters he faced, the Yanks broke through when Ibanez plated the game's first run in the fifth with a single. Ichiro Suzuki doubled in the second run in the sixth, and Curtis Granderson homered in the seventh to make it 3–0. Sabathia coughed up a run in the eighth on a trio of singles and a walk, before closing out the game with five straight outs. Adam Jones gave Yankees fans a scare, leading off the ninth with a fly ball deep to left-center, but his drive fell just short. Sabathia fanned Davis before Wieters grounded out, ending Baltimore's surprising season and advancing New York to the League Championship Series.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP SERIES

The Giants clawed back from the brink for the second consecutive time in the 2013 postseason, this time thoroughly dominating the Cardinals after losing three of the first four NLCS games. San Francisco outscored St. Louis, 20-1, while taking the final three games.

Game 1 was the first postseason matchup of the previous two World Series winners since 1958. The Redbirds scored the first six times on a two-run shot by David Freese in the second, followed by four more in the fourth, capped by a two-run homer from Carlos Beltran. But the Giants came back, posting four in the home half of the fourth on four consecutive two-out hits by Hunter Pence, Brandon Belt, Gregor Blanco, and Brandon Crawford. The Giants threatened again in the fifth, putting two on with one out, but reliever Joe Kelly got Hunter Pence to fly out and Marc Rzepczynski induced Belt to do the same. San Fran managed only two baserunners the rest of the game.

The Giants dominated Game 2, both at the plate and on the mound. Starter and winner Ryan Vogelsong allowed just four hits and a run in seven innings as Marco Scutaro and Ryan Theriot each drove in two runs, leading San Francisco to a 7–1 win. Angel Pagan got things started in the bottom of the first with a leadoff homer off losing pitcher Chris Carpenter. The Cards tied it in the second on a walk by Pete Kozma and a double by Carpenter. The Giants then put the game away with four runs in the fourth, three of those courtesy of a throwing error by Carpenter and a miscue by left fielder Matt Holliday.

In Game 3, the Cardinals lost right fielder Beltran to a knee injury in the first inning. The home team then fell behind by a run in the third when a groundout by Pablo Sandoval pushed home the game's first run. But Beltran's replacement, Matt Carpenter, smacked a two-run homer in the bottom of the third to give the Redbirds the lead for good. The Giants had two baserunners in both the sixth and seventh innings, but Pagan grounded out to end the first threat, and Pence and Belt both fanned to finish the seventh frame. Shane Robinson drove in the third run for the Cards in the bottom of the seventh to make the final score 3–1; Jason Motte earned the save by retiring the final six Giants hitters.

Beltran's absence in Game 4 was a non-issue, as St. Louis pounded out 12 hits in an easy 8–3 victory, with Jon Jay, Yadier Molina, and Holliday each batting in two. Jay singled leading off the bottom of the first, Matt Carpenter walked, and Holliday singled to drive in the first run. The second scored on a sacrifice fly. Pence, who had failed to get a hit in three at-bats with two runners on base in Game 3, homered with two out in the top of the second, but the Giants wouldn't score again until the game was out of hand, as the Cardinals scored a pair in each of the fifth, sixth, and seventh innings.

Sandoval clubbed a two-run homer in the ninth, but Fernando Salas, who had relieved starter Adam Wainwright in the eighth, recovered to retire the final two hitters, putting St. Louis up, three games to one.

That would be the high-water mark for St. Louis, as the Cardinals never led in any of the final three games. Barry Zito won Game 5, allowing only six hits in 7.2 innings, though the veteran southpaw was far from perfect. The Giants struck for four in the fourth after a throwing error by losing pitcher Lynn. Scutaro and Sandoval singled to start the inning, then Buster Posey fanned. Pence grounded one back to Lynn who, instead of taking the sure out at first, tried to force Sandoval at second but threw the ball away as Scutaro scored. Belt popped up for what should have been the final out, before Crawford rapped a two-run single and Zito drove in the fourth run with a bunt base hit. Sandoval's leadoff homer in the eighth rounded out the scoring; Santiago Casilla and Sergio Romo finished off the 5–0 shutout for the Giants.

Chris Carpenter had the opportunity to clinch a second straight World Series berth in Game 6, but the Cardinals' ace lasted just four innings after surrendering five runs on six hits. Meanwhile, the visitors' bats remained silent, getting just five hits and a lone run off Ryan Vogelsong and three relievers. San Francisco scored a run in the first on a groundout by Posey, then added four more in the second on an error by Kozma at short, three hits, and a walk. Scutaro's two-run double was the big blow in the second, with Sandoval chipping in with an RBI single. St. Louis scored its solitary run when Beltran doubled with two out in the sixth and scored on a single by Craig. Vogelsong was masterful for the hometown Giants, striking out nine for the first time in his career, as San Francisco triumphed 6–1.

A freak double by Pence highlighted San Francisco's 9-0 drubbing in Game 7. After scoring single runs in the first (infield grounder by Sandoval) and second (two-out single by starting pitcher Matt Cain), the Giants scored five in the third as Scutaro's single, Sandoval's double, and a walk to Posey chased Cardinals' starter Kyle Lohse. Reliever Joe Kelly broke Pence's shillelagh, but the ball hit the bat barrel twice after it broke, launching it into the gap in left-center and clearing the bases. The Giants scored two more times on infield grounders to take a seven-run lead. The Giants scored a run on a double play ground ball off the bat of Aubrey Huff in the seventh, and Belt hit a two-out home run in the ninth: the resulting nine-run margin tied for the fourth biggest Game 7 whitewashing in postseason history. (The Cardinals were drubbed 15–0 by the Braves in the 1996 NLCS and 11–0 by the Royals in the 1985 World Series; St. Louis blanked Detroit, 11–0, in the 1934 Fall Classic.) Scutaro, who tied the LCS record with 14 hits, was named series MVP.

AMERICAN LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP SERIES

As it turned out, the Yankees lost more than just the opener of the 2012 ALCS in the Bronx: they lost their captain and their way as well. After the 12th inning of Game 1, the AL East champions quickly folded up their pinstriped tent, losing the following three contests without much of a fight.

The Bombers left the bases loaded in each of the first two innings, failing to score off Bengals starter Doug Fister. That allowed Detroit to forge ahead in the sixth on back-to-back RBI singles by Prince Fielder and Delmon Young. New York again futilely left the sacks full in the sixth. The Tigers added two more runs in the eighth on a solo homer by Young and a single by Avisail Garcia.

Leading 4–0 going into the bottom of the ninth, Detroit manager Jim Leyland called for his closer. The Yanks, however, figuratively ripped Jose Valverde apart, starting with Russell Martin's leadoff single. After Derek Jeter fanned, Ichiro Suzuki lined a homer down the right field line to cut the lead in half. Valverde got Robinson Cano swinging on a full-count pitch, but then walked Mark Teixeira after going to another full count. Raul Ibanez, hero of the Division Series, then stunned the Tigers when he drove the second pitch over the right field wall to tie the game. Octavio Dotel replaced the shell-shocked Valverde, who would appear only once more for the Tigers in the postseason.

Things fell apart for the Yankees in the 12th, in more ways than one. Miguel Cabrera led off with a walk, advancing to second on a groundout and scoring on a double by Young. Two infield singles plated another to make the score 6–4. The first hit turned into a disaster when shortstop Jeter broke his ankle fielding a ball to his left off the bat of Jhonny Peralta. Jeter turned his ankle as he reached for the ball; the injury forced the longtime Yankees' captain off the field. After the game, the announcement came that Jeter (who had hit .364 and scored four runs in the Division Series against Baltimore) would miss the rest of the postseason.

It turned out to be a short run without their captain, as the Yanks managed to score only two runs in the next 27 innings. In Game 2, New York was whitewashed on four hits, falling 3–0. Detroit starter Anibal Sanchez struck out seven in seven innings and Phil Coke whiffed a trio in his two innings of relief. The contest was scoreless until the Tigers scratched out a run in the top of the seventh when Quintin Berry doubled leading off and scored on a grounder to short by Young. The Bengals added two more in the eighth on consecutive singles by Omar Infante, Austin Jackson, Garcia, and Cabrera. Television replays showed that Infante should have been called out at second after rounding the base too far after Jackson's hit, adding to the Yankees' agony. Manager Joe Girardi argued the call to no avail and wound up being ejected.

Traveling to Detroit, the sagging Yankees managed only five hits in Game 3. Girardi benched Rodriguez, as his struggling superstar had sunk to a .130 postseason batting average with no extra-base hits and no RBIs, striking out more than half of the time. Stellar pitching by the Bombers' bullpen, however, preserved a chance for victory despite the club's anemic attack. New York starter Phil Hughes was lifted in the fourth inning because of back problems, but his relief corps limited Detroit to just one unearned tally in six innings. Young's leadoff homer in the fourth, combined with Cabrera's RBI double in the fifth, looked like they would suffice, as Justin Verlander limited the Yanks to one run in eight frames. In the ninth, however, the Detroit ace surrendered a leadoff homer to Eduardo Nunez before giving way to Phil Coke. Coke induced Suzuki to ground out, but singles by Teixeira and Cano put the potential tying run on second. Postseason hero Ibanez couldn't turn the tide this time, as the hero of the ALDS fanned on a 3–2 pitch to end the game.

Detroit made its intention to sweep apparent early in Game 4, pushing six runs across the plate in the first four innings. Young singled in a run in the first, and Garcia did the same in the third. A pair of two-run blasts in the fourth by Cabrera and Peralta off NY starter CC Sabathia put the game out of reach. New York managed a run in the sixth on a triple by Nunez and a double by Swisher, but those were the only two safeties the Yanks could muster in the game, thanks to masterful pitching by starter Max Scherzer (10 strikeouts in 5.2 innings) and three relievers. Jackson homered in the seventh and Peralta poled his second four-bagger of the game in the eighth to make it 8–1. Dotel and Coke combined to retire the final nine Yankees' hitters and propel the Tigers into the World Series in front of a deliriously happy crowd at Comerica Park.

WORLD SERIES

As was true in 2006, the American League champion Tigers had an extended break after their easy victory in the ALCS. Six years earlier, Detroit enjoyed a full week off after sweeping the Athletics. When they returned to action, the Bengals were trounced by St. Louis in five games in the 2006 Fall Classic. In 2012, Detroit skipper Jim Leyland insisted that his team would be better prepared following their five-day layoff. Perhaps they were, but the result was even worse when the Giants swept the Tigers.

Pablo Sandoval was the star of the show in Game 1 at AT&T Park, belting three home runs in his first three trips to the plate. That equaled the World Series record, first set by Babe Ruth in 1926, then matched by the Sultan of Swat two years later, and afterward equaled by Reggie Jackson in 1977 and Albert Pujols in 2011. Sandoval's first blast, a solo homer in the bottom of the first, got the scoring started. The Giants added three more in the third when Marco Scutaro singled in Angel Pagan before the San Francisco slugger launched his second over the fence.

The Giants added another an inning later when Barry Zito dribbled one past third base with two out to score Brandon Belt. When Sandoval belted another solo shot with one out in the fifth, the score stood 6–0 and the Tigers' chances were dim.

Zito didn't have much difficulty on the mound. After getting out of a jam in the first, when Detroit put runners on first and second with one out, the finesse left-hander allowed only two more runners in the next four innings. The Tigers managed to get on the scoreboard in the sixth when Austin Jackson led off with a double and scored one out later on a single by Miguel Cabrera. With two on and two outs, Zito gave way to reliever Tim Lincecum. However, that run was all Detroit could muster until the ninth, when Jhonny Peralta clubbed a two-run homer after San Fran had plated two more in the seventh on singles by Scutaro and Buster Posey. The final score was 8–3, with Tigers ace Justin Verlander taking the loss after allowing five runs in his four innings of work.

Game 2 was a true pitchers' duel, as Detroit's Doug Fister and San Francisco's Madison Bumgarner combined to keep the game scoreless through the first six innings. Each team threatened once in that time. Prince Fielder was hit by a pitch leading off the top of the second, but the Tigers' massive first baseman was thrown out at the plate trying to score on a double by Delmon Young. The Giants made a little noise when they loaded the bases with two out in bottom of the second, but Bumgarner popped to short to end the inning.

The Giants scored the game's first run in the seventh without bringing out their heavy lumber. Hunter Pence led off with a single on a weak grounder through the hole between short and third. Belt followed with a walk, and Gregor Blanco attempted a sacrifice bunt that was placed well enough to go instead for a single that loaded the bases. Brandon Crawford then grounded into a double play, scoring Pence. San Francisco added an insurance run an inning later on three walks—one intentional—and a sacrifice fly by Pence. Meanwhile, Bumgarner, Santiago Casilla and Sergio Romo combined to mow down the final eight Tigers hitters to finish off a two-hit, 2–0 shutout.

Although the Series moved to Motown for Game 3, the result was identical, as the visitors won Game 3, 2–0. The Giants jumped out to an early lead when Pence walked leading off the second and scored on a triple by Blanco, who then scored on a two-out hit by Crawford. The Tigers managed to threaten when Infante and Jackson singled with one out in the third, but Quintin Berry grounded into a double play to end the inning. In the fifth, Detroit filled the sacks with one out on singles by Alex Avila and Infante, plus a walk to Jackson. But Berry struck out and Cabrera popped to short to kill that rally, and Detroit wouldn't get another hit the rest of the way. San Francisco starter and winner Ryan Vogelsong wasn't sharp, allowing five hits and four walks in 5.2 innings, but he was backed up by Lincecum, who was nicked for only a walk in 2.1 innings of relief, and Romo, who pitched a perfect ninth to earn his second save in as many games.

Even though San Francisco completed the sweep in Game 4, the Giants had to work hard to earn it. Belt tripled in the game's first run in the top of the second, but Detroit claimed its first (and only) lead of the series by scoring a pair in the third when Jackson walked with one out and rode home on a long homer to right by Cabrera. The Bengals held the lead until the sixth, when San Francisco surged back in front thanks to a two-run blast by Posey. Detroit tied the game in the bottom of the sixth on a solo home run by Young.

Neither team enjoyed another scoring chance until extra innings, when Ryan Theriot led off the top of the 10th with a single, advancing to second on a sac bunt by Crawford. Pagan whiffed, but Scutaro lined a single to center to put San Francisco ahead, 4–3. Romo experienced no trouble in the bottom of the 10th as he struck out the side for his third save of the Series, with Triple Crown winner Cabrera looking at the final pitch of the game.

Sandoval, who batted .500 (8-for-16) in addition to his three bombs in the first contest, was named the World Series MVP.

POSTSEASON AWARDS

One of baseball's greatest strengths is the passion which certain aspects of the game engender in its fans—and, secondarily, in the media. The game's premier individual awards, given out by the Baseball Writers' Association of America, are nexuses of passion and performance. In 2012, the debate over the American League Most Valuable Player Award evolved into a de facto referendum on the validity of contemporary baseball analysis.

Supporters of Tigers slugger Miguel Cabrera pointed to his superb offensive season and the first Triple Crown in MLB since 1967. Those in favor of precocious Angels rookie outfielder Mike Trout pointed to sabermetric statistics that showed he had a better season overall than Cabrera, and wondered why a Triple Crown in itself made anyone more valuable to his team. Generally ignored in the debate was the fact that only six of 10 Triple Crown winners (in years when official MVP awards were given out) have also been judged to be their league's MVP.

As the argument broke down into the merits of so-called "traditional statistics" versus what have become known as "advanced metrics," the rancor grew. Trout partisans pointed to his superior overall WAR (an acronym for Wins Above Replacement), his defense, and his baserunning. Meanwhile, Cabrera partisans largely dismissed the analytical measures, choosing to rely on the Triple Crown statistics they grew up with and were comfortable with.

Though the twenty-first century BBWAA electorate is somewhat younger than those in recent decades—and much more knowledgeable about advanced metrics than ever before—Cabrera won the prized award fairly easily. Whether that result proves that all is right in the National Pastime or that many of the writers have a long way to go in understanding contemporary advances in analysis depends on which side of the debate one lands.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER AWARDS

Cabrera slammed .330 with 44 homers and 139 RBIs on his way to the first AL Triple Crown since 1967. The fearsome slugger landed 22 of 28 first-place votes and six second-place nods to total 362 points. After moving across the Detroit infield in the offseason to make room for free agent Prince Fielder at first base, Cabrera acquitted himself well with the leather, though few would argue that his defense at the hot corner was better than middling. Helping the Tigers win the Central Division with a September surge made his candidacy that much stronger. This was Cabrera's first MVP after five previous finishes in the top five.

Trout, who hit .326 with 30 homers and 83 RBIs in his rookie campaign, received the other six first-place votes. Another 21 voters placed him second as the center fielder amassed 281 points. Making Trout's performance all the more impressive was the fact that he hadn't been called up until April 28. He carried his team from there on; however, Los Angeles finished third in the AL West, hurting his claim to be more valuable to his team than Cabrera. Yet the Angels finished with a better record than the Tigers in a stronger division. Trout topped the AL in runs, despite playing just 139 games, and also led the league with 49 stolen bases (with only five times caught stealing). He also played well defensively at a key position.

The only other player to receive a first- or second-place vote was Adrian Beltre of Texas, who received one second-place nod, by an elector that placed Trout third. Beltre's 210 points placed him comfortably in third after he hit .321 with 36 four-baggers and 102 batted in for the Rangers, who crumbled down the stretch.

Yankees second-sacker Robinson Cano notched 149 points to finish fourth in the voting, followed by center fielders Josh Hamilton of Texas (127) and Adam Jones of Baltimore (120). Probably the silliest vote of the year was that of one AL writer who put Orioles reliever Jim Johnson third on his ballot due to his topping the AL with 51 saves. Other writers weren't so impressed, as the Orioles' closer finished only 14th in the MVP standings.

In the National League, San Francisco catcher Buster Posey, who took the batting crown at .336 and chipped in 24 homers and 103 RBIs, bagged his first MVP Award in a landslide. There was little debate about his selection: Posey got 27 of 32 first-place votes, four second-places, and one third to tally 422 points.

Milwaukee's Ryan Braun, the defending NL MVP, finished second, as the slugging left fielder's .319 BA, 41 home runs, and 112 runs batted in wasn't enough to repeat his 2011 win. Garnering three first-place votes, 15 seconds, 10 thirds, and four fourths, Braun was found on every ballot and totaled 285 points.

Pittsburgh's Andrew McCutchen enjoyed a breakout season, hitting .327 (second in the NL), topping the circuit in hits and clubbing 31 homers. While the Pittsburgh center fielder did not see a first-place vote, six electors named McCutchen second-best, with 13 having him third (245 points).

In fourth with 241 points was St. Louis catcher Yadier Molina, who hit .315/.373/.501 and established career highs in homers, RBIs, and steals (with 12!). Despite being left off one ballot, Molina was tabbed for first-place twice. San Diego third baseman Chase Headley, who hit 31 round-trippers and led the league with 115 RBIs, finished fifth with 127 points.

CY YOUNG AWARDS

David Price of Tampa Bay narrowly edged 2011's winner, Justin Verlander of Detroit. Price tied for the AL lead with his 20 wins and .800 winning percentage and led outright with a 2.56 ERA. Verlander, superb with a 17-8 record, led the loop with six complete games, 238 innings, and 239 strikeouts. The balloting reflected the narrowness of the choice: Price received 14 first-place votes, 13 second-place votes, and one third-place. Verlander received 13 firsts, 13 seconds, and two thirds. The result was: Price, 153 points; Verlander, 149.

Jered Weaver of the Angels, who tied Price for the league lead in wins and percentage, might have won in other years. In 2012, he had to settle for third place with 70 points. The 28th first-place vote went to Tampa reliever Fernando Rodney, who finished second in the AL with 48 saves while posting a microscopic 0.60 ERA in 75 innings, to establish a new lowest mark for a relief pitcher (min. 60 IP).

The NL Cy Young was an easy triumph for Mets knuckleball specialist R.A. Dickey. At age 37, Dickey garnered 27 first-place votes and five second-place votes (209 points) on the strength of his stellar 20-6 record for a 74-88 club. Dickey topped the NL in starts, complete games, innings, shutouts, and strikeouts, and finished second in ERA.

The NL's ERA leader was Clayton Kershaw of Los Angeles, who finished second with 96 points despite being left completely off two ballots. Kershaw, the recipient of the 2011 NL Cy Young, topped the loop in ERA again, but posted a 14-9 record. Washington's Gio Gonzalez, 21-8 with a 2.89 ERA for the runaway NL East winners, totaled 93 points to finish third.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR AWARDS

The National League rookie race was surprisingly close, given how much publicity 19-year-old Washington center fielder Bryce Harper generated during the season. Harper played quality defense and hit .270 with 22 home runs for the Nationals, but he barely edged Arizona hurler Wade Miley (16-11, 3.33), 112 points to 105.

Harper racked up 16 first-place votes and eight second-place votes, but eight writers also placed him third on their ballots. Miley was first on 12 ballots, second on 13, and third on six others. One writer left him off completely. Cincinnati's Todd Frazier wound up a distant third, with three first-place votes. The final first-place vote went to Colorado catcher Wilin Rosario, who finished fourth.

Center fielder Mike Trout of the Angels was a unanimous winner of the AL's freshman honors, receiving every first-place vote. Yoenis Cespedes, debuting in the majors at age 27 after defecting from Cuba, provided enough punch to the surprising Athletics (.292/.356/.505) to finish second, on the basis of 19 second-place mentions and six third-place.

The third-place finisher was Rangers hurler Yu Darvish, who compiled a 16-9 mark in 29 starts. Darvish had previously starred with the Nippon Ham Fighters in the Japanese Pacific League before being signed by Texas in January.

MANAGER OF THE YEAR AWARDS

The 2012 season was a triumphant return to the top for Davey Johnson, whose Washington Nationals finished first in the East while compiling the NL's best record. The BBWAA in turn named Johnson NL Manager of the Year as the 69-year-old pilot garnered 23 of 32 first-place nods and was named on all but one ballot. Johnson had previously captured the AL manager trophy in 1997 with Baltimore.

With 131 points, Johnson easily outdistanced Dusty Baker, who led the Reds to the NL Central title. Baker was named atop five ballots and totaled 77 points, 16 points ahead of third-place finisher Bruce Bochy of the West Division champion Giants (four first-places). Atlanta's Fredi Gonzalez finished fourth with four second-place and five third-place votes. Cardinals skipper Mike Matheny, whose club won the NL Wild Card in his first year in the dugout, received just one third-place vote, the same as Padres manager Bud Black.

The American League award voting was extremely close. Bob Melvin of the West Division champion Athletics and Buck Showalter of the Wild Card–winning Orioles ranked first or second on all 28 ballots. Melvin captured 16 first-place nominations and collected 116 points, eight ahead of Showalter. Neither the A's nor O's were expected to contend, much less win 94 and 93 games, respectively.

Third place went to Chicago rookie skipper Robin Ventura, named on 12 ballots despite his club's September nosedive. Joe Maddon of Tampa Bay and East Division winner Joe Girardi of New York placed fourth and fifth, respectively. [See page 89 for complete lists of annual awards.]

CHANGING OF THE GUARD

The 2012 season was placid as far as in-season firings, with only one manager receiving his pink slip before late September. Several other skippers who managed to tap dance through the campaign, however, were ushered from the theater immediately after the curtain rang down.

The Houston Astros, stumbling to a franchise-worst 57–105 record in their final year in the National League, canned manager Brad Mills on August 18 and replaced him with organizational soldier Tony DeFrancesco. The firing came a few weeks after Houston GM Jeff Luhnow had executed July deals with five different trading partners, disposing of veterans Carlos Lee, Brandon Lyon, J.A. Happ, Brett Myers, Wandy Rodriguez, and Chris Johnson. In return, the bargain-basement Astros netted a battalion of prospects and a couple of veterans. The Astros' Triple-A skipper led a band of hopefuls the rest of the way before the team hired Nationals third-base coach Bo Porter to run things in 2013.

In the midst of a complete organizational overhaul under new general manager Jeff Luhnow, the Astros used 50 players, half of them pitchers, in 2012. Making his job ever more trying was the fact that Mills had endured deadline deals for some his best players in each of the last three years. Porter's leadership skills, patience, teaching ability, and willingness to sign on for a tough job made him a perfect candidate. He became one of only three current African-American managers in MLB, joining Dusty Baker and Ron Washington.

Fired along with Mills were hitting coach Mike Barnett and first base coach Bobby Meacham. Houston's minor league hitting coordinator Ty Van Burkleo took over for Barnett for the rest of the season, while former Washington first base coach Dan Radison assumed Meacham's duties on an interim basis.

The Miami Marlins, who entered the season riding a wave of optimism, quickly imploded. New manager Ozzie Guillen wore out his welcome in a way that shocked everyone, but also surprised very few. Guillen's passion and heritage—along with his 2005 World Series ring—were supposed to attract South Florida's Latino baseball fans, but the veteran manager got into hot water right away. In April, Guillen asserted that he got drunk after every game, whether the team won or lost. A few days later, his frankness got him into even more agua caliente. Quoted in Time magazine, Guillen said, "I love Fidel Castro, I respect Fidel Castro. You know why? A lot of people have wanted to kill Fidel Castro for the last 60 years, but that [expletive] is still here."

After the predictable outcry from the conservative Cuban community, Miami suspended its own manager for five games. The mild sanction didn't work, as Guillen never won back the fans, the media, or his players. Heath Bell fell out with his manager, who had quite reasonably replaced the underperforming free agent closer at midseason with rookie Steve Cishek. Guillen wore everyone out with his continuing Twitter dramas and his public airing out of players.

Whatever Marlins fans Guillen hadn't alienated were thrown overboard by Miami management when the club started dumping veterans and their salaries in midseason. The first move was to send starter Anibal Sanchez (in his walk year) and second baseman Omar Infante to the Tigers on July 23 for top pitching prospect Jacob Turner, plus minor leaguers Rob Brantly and Brian Flynn. Barely 24 hours later, underperforming infielder Hanley Ramirez—only a few years earlier, considered the future of the star-crossed franchise—was traded with reliever Randy Choate to the Dodgers for pitching prospects Nathan Eovaldi and Scott McGough. LA absorbed the remaining $37.5 million due Ramirez through 2014.

After the season ended, the embattled skipper took a vacation. Upon returning on October 23, he was informed he had been fired and replaced by former Marlins catcher Mike Redmond. The downsizing club emulated the White Sox and Cardinals by selecting a well-liked former player as its new manager. In this case, however, Redmond, who retired in 2010 after a 13-year big-league career, had two years of experience managing in Class A before being selected to helm Miami's major rebuilding effort.

Boston fans experienced quite an eventful year, if not an enjoyable one. New manager Bobby Valentine and his squad endured an awful campaign marked by clubhouse dissension, poor performance, and an acrid air of controversy on the way to a 69–93 record that was much more than a disappointment.

The prickly veteran manager started making enemies right away, beginning with popular third baseman Kevin Youkilis, whom Valentine called out for a lack of fire. From there, the trouble mounted as Valentine razzed one rookie in the dugout about his fielding and pinch-hit for another during an at-bat. Valentine continued to shoot from the hip all season, often roiling the water instead of calming things down.

Secret player-only meetings stirred the pot, which boiled over when the media learned about them. The situation got so bad in August that the team had to trade first baseman Adrian Gonzalez and pitcher Josh Beckett to the Dodgers. Youkilis had already been shipped off to the White Sox in June. On August 20, the team fired pitching coach Bob McClure and replaced him with Randy Niemann, in his first year with the organization as McClure's assistant.

Though under siege, Valentine had his defenders. Many pundits saw the ugliness as the logical result of the Red Sox' dysfunctional management, who had undermined previous manager Terry Francona in 2011. Plenty of players and coaches had sharp knives out for Valentine, partly because—for better and for worse—Bobby V. had the temerity to call things the way he saw them.

Despite steadfast support from the executive suite during the season—at least publicly—Valentine was let go on October 4. GM Ben Cherington hired the team's former pitching coach, John Farrell, from the Blue Jays, where he had been managing for two seasons. Boston had unsuccessfully sought permission to talk to Farrell after the 2011 season, but when Jays GM Alex Anthopoulos learned late last summer that Farrell was still interested in the opportunity, he worked out a deal and acquired infielder Mike Aviles in exchange for Farrell and pitcher David Carpenter.

Forgoing the third year of his Toronto deal for a new three-year pact from Boston, Farrell returned to Fenway, where he had coached the Red Sox' pitchers from 2007–2010. Some of the team's biggest stars immediately commented positively about their new manager. Bench coach Tim Bogar denied that the Sox' coaches were disloyal to Valentine; Bogar was fired a few days after Farrell was hired.

The Jays, in turn, hired John Gibbons, who had previously skippered Toronto from August 2004 to July 2008. Bringing in the seasoned Gibbons (who, since leaving the Jays, had been the Royals' bench coach for three years before spending 2012 managing at Double A) to run the team indicates that the Jays feel that the time to contend in the AL East is now, with the Yankees aging, Tampa Bay struggling, the Orioles enigmatic, and the Red Sox rebuilding from the ashes.

Cleveland sacked Manny Acta on September 27, with six games to go in the Indians' nightmarish 68–94 season. Bench coach Sandy Alomar Jr. took over as acting manager but was passed over when management hired Terry Francona on October 6, one day after his interview. Francona had spent 2012 in the TV booth as a commentator. A late-season free-fall—the Tribe was in a horrid 15–42 slide when Alomar took over—precipitated the move. Pitching coach Scott Radinsky had been fired during a particularly awful stretch in August, with Ruben Niebla taking over.

The only manager to resign in 2012 was Colorado's Jim Tracy, who surprised when he left on October 7 after the Rockies had compiled their all-time worst record (64–98). Though popular within the organization, Tracy chose to depart because of philosophical differences with Bill Geivett, the team's Senior VP of Major League Operations, who had taken over the day-to-day running of the team from General Manager Dan O'Dowd on August 1. Tracy was the first casualty, albeit an unintended one, of Colorado owner Dick Monfort's attempt to redefine the roles and responsibilities in his front office.

O'Dowd, the Rockies' GM since 1999, retained his title but ceded many of his responsibilities when Geivett was promoted. Geivett, formerly the team's scouting and player development director, broke with baseball tradition by immediately moving his desk into the clubhouse. Tracy claimed to be comfortable with the unusual move, but what else could he say?

Preceding Tracy, pitching coach Bob Apodaca had resigned in June, citing mental and physical exhaustion. The club tried several novel experiments, including hiring Jim Wright and Bo McLaughlin as co-pitching coaches. The most controversial change emanating from above was the implementation of a four-man rotation, with starters limited to 75 pitches each and with relievers being used on a regular schedule. Tracy did not initiate or approve of those experiments, and the team eventually returned to a five-man rotation late in the year. But Geivett, having done studies of long-term pitching health, is determined to use revolutionarily low pitch counts in an attempt to reduce injuries.

Geivett also made it clear that he would have a greater role in hiring coaches for 2013 as the Rockies attempt to eliminate the usual barriers between field personnel and general managers. He picked Walt Weiss as his new manager, following the recent trend of hiring inexperienced skippers. A popular former Rockies shortstop who had retired in 2000, Weiss had no managerial experience save running his son's high school team in 2012. The Rockies are betting that Weiss's intelligence and makeup will make up for lack of experience.

Two other coaches got the ax during the 2012 season even though their managers survived. After signing Albert Pujols to a huge contract in December 2011, the Angels sagged unexpectedly early on as the club's new superstar slugger struggled. Hitting coach Mickey Hatcher paid the price on May 15, relieved of his duties in favor of Jim Eppard. Stan Kyles, the Brewers' bullpen coach, lost his job on July 30, a casualty of the team's horrid bullpen performance during the early going. He was replaced by Lee Tunnell, the organization's minor league pitching coordinator.

Upstairs, not a single general manager was terminated in 2012. White Sox GM Kenny Williams was promoted to executive vice president in late October, passing along nearly all of his former duties to Rick Hahn, his assistant for the past 12 seasons. Hahn will oversee all player and coaching personnel decisions, though how much Williams will continue to supervise day-to-day decisions remains to be seen. Along with keeping a hand in talent evaluation, Williams will focus more on long-term strategic issues. The White Sox still struggle to draw good crowds, and changing that is a priority for the franchise.

Several teams rearranged personnel in the broadcast booth for 2013. Arizona, having let their TV team of Daron Sutton and Mark Grace go, replaced them with ESPN's Steve Berthiaume and former D-backs manager Bob Brenly, who had served as the Cubs' television color man since 2005. Sutton's departure was not explained; Grace was let go after a second DUI incident, which could result in his being sent to prison. To replace Brenly, Chicago plucked former hurler Jim Deshaies out of Houston, where he'd assisted Bill Brown on Astros telecasts since 1998.

Houston, completely remaking its image as it makes its American League debut, replaced nearly all of its English-language broadcast team. Milo Hamilton retired after six decades in the business, and radio colleagues Brett Dolan and Dave Raymond were not rehired for 2013.

Across the state in Arlington, the Rangers announced that Steve Busby would return in 2013 as their full-time TV voice. Busby, previously the team's radio analyst, took over in midseason from Dave Barnett, who experienced medical problems that led to a bizarre on-screen ramble. Matt Hicks, promoted last summer to assist radio play-by-play man Eric Nadel, remained in his new role.

Finally, Major League Baseball Players Association Executive Director Michael Weiner, much respected on both sides of the table, disclosed in August that he was suffering from an inoperable brain tumor. The 51-year-old Weiner, who had succeeded Don Fehr in 2009, continues to work while undergoing treatment. He has been with the Players Association since 1988 and served as General Counsel from 2004–2009.

FAREWELL AND AMEN

The most important baseball figure to pass away in 2012 wasn't a player and isn't in the Hall of Fame: Marvin Miller, who died November 27 in New York City at age 95 due to cancer. Miller was the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association from 1966 through 1982. After retiring, Miller briefly returned as interim director in late 1983 after his replacement, Ken Moffett, was fired. Miller remained a close adviser to Moffett's successor, longtime MLBPA director Donald Fehr, and to current director Michael Weiner.

A former economist for the federal government and the United Steelworkers of America, Miller brought baseball players—and, eventually, all professional athletes—into a modern golden age by employing negotiating skill, brilliant tactics, careful persuasion, and almost unlimited patience. Dramatically ratcheting up the players' control of their careers as well as their financial remuneration, Miller and the union he led forced owners to cede their ironclad control of the National Pastime.

Miller's accomplishments were many. They included negotiating the first collective bargaining agreement in professional sports in 1968 and persuading the owners to accept binding arbitration for player grievances in 1970. Arbitration was extended to some salary disputes in 1973. Miller's crowning achievement was the advent of a system for restricted free agency in 1976, negotiated after the paradigm shift of the so-called Seitz decision in 1975. Miller had carefully crafted the strategy that resulted in the destruction of the century-old reserve clause, laying the foundation by supporting Curt Flood's legal challenge in the early 1970s. While Flood was unsuccessful, a few years later, Miller and the players would prevail in the Messersmith-McNally grievance when arbitrator Peter Seitz wrote his historic decision.

For three decades, MLB owners fought Miller and his successors at the union Miller effectively created. In the past 15 years, however, baseball owners and players have cooperated to an unprecedented degree, jointly creating unprecedented revenue streams.

The MLBPA is viewed by many as the most successful labor union in American history. Many on the management side hated Miller for that, but history has taken a much more favorable view of his accomplishments. When Miller came aboard, the standard player contract was essentially a form of indentured servitude, and major league players were both grossly underpaid and almost completely at the mercy of the owners.

Changing the labor relations culture in baseball became a battle royal, leading to the players going on strike in 1972, 1980, and 1981 under Miller. The owners also locked out the players in 1973 and 1976 during Miller's tenure. Nevertheless, the game is certainly fiscally stronger now than it was before Miller made the players' union a force for change in baseball, and the doom-and-gloom predictions of many owners and management negotiators about the ultimate effects of the union's demands have proved unfounded.

That fact that Miller has not yet been elected to the Hall of Fame has been very controversial, especially after the enshrinement of former Commissioner Bowie Kuhn in 2008. It is inconceivable to most historians and pundits that the game's highest honor could be bestowed on Bowie Kuhn—an executive who fought vigorously the progress wrought by the Players Association and Marvin Miller—changes that are largely responsible for baseball's current prosperity. A disappointed Miller said in 2008 that he no longer wanted to be considered for the Hall. Though Miller's wishes were not honored, he has also not yet been elected.

Lee MacPhail passed away November 8 at age 95. Son of Hall of Fame baseball executive Larry, Lee carved out a distinguished baseball career in his own right that lasted more than four decades. Lee's son, Andy, has also enjoyed a long and successful career as a baseball executive.

As GM of the Baltimore Orioles, Lee MacPhail helped build the winning clubs of the mid- and late-1960s. MacPhail also served as general manager of the New York Yankees for eight seasons and, after that, served as AL president from 1974 through 1983. Lee was enshrined in Cooperstown in 1998, thus creating the only father-son pair in the hallowed halls.

The Boston Red Sox lost a legend on August 13 as shortstop Johnny Pesky passed away at 93. One of the better shortstops of the postwar, pre-expansion era, Pesky wore the Carmines' flannels from 1942–1952. As a 23-year-old rookie in 1942, Pesky finished third in the AL MVP vote. He missed the following three seasons due to service in World War II, then returned to lead the league in hits in 1946 when the Sox won the AL pennant. In 1948, Pesky moved to third base to make room for power-hitting shortstop Vern Stephens. Pesky remained part of the Red Sox' organization as a coach and announcer, serving for decades as a spring training instructor as well as the incarnation of the New England franchise.

Jerry McMorris, owner of the Rockies from 1992 through 2005, died from pancreatic cancer on May 8 in Aurora, Colorado at age 71. McMorris built NationsWay Transport into a huge trucking business in the 1960s and 1970s, making him one of Colorado's most successful entrepreneurs. In 1992, less than year before the expansion Rockies were scheduled to take the field for the first time, original owner Mickey Monus's empire fell apart when he was indicted for embezzlement. McMorris—already involved as an investor—stepped up and, with successful food industry magnates Dick and Charlie Monfort, organized the purchase of the club. McMorris held the controlling interest in the Colorado franchise and served as its CEO until 2001. NationsWay, however, experienced financial problems beginning in the 1990s, and in 2005 McMorris was forced to sell his shares of the Rockies to the Monforts.

American League umpire and, later, umpire supervisor Marty Springstead passed away January 12, 2012 of a heart attack in his hometown of Sarasota, Florida. He was 74. Springstead, an AL umpire from 1966 through 1985, became the youngest-ever crew chief to work a World Series in 1973. He began his professional career in blue in 1960, rising to the top of his profession as a crew chief for 11 years and umpiring three World Series and five ALCS. Springstead was known for not taking any guff, and his battles with Hall of Fame manager Earl Weaver were legendary.

Following his on-field career, Springstead served as the AL's Executive Director of Umpires and, starting in 2000, as MLB's Umpire Supervisor. In this position, he taught and evaluated umpires all over the world.

Harry Wendelstedt, one of the game's great umpires, got the call from the great arbiter in the sky on March 9 at age 73. He began his pro career in 1962 as a 23-year-old in the Georgia-Florida League. Wendelstedt moved up quickly, and the National League hired him for the 1966 season. Immediately he established himself as a hard-nosed but fair and talented umpire—especially behind the plate—and worked more than his share of World Series, All-Star, and LCS games.

In 1998, Harry's son Hunter also reached the majors as an umpire, and father and son became the first such duo to work together. After that campaign, his 33rd, Harry retired, but hardly stopped working: his umpiring school in Florida is the world's largest.

Padres bullpen coach Darrel Akerfelds, 50, lost his battle with pancreatic cancer on June 24. A five-year veteran as a player, the former relief pitcher had served on San Diego's coaching staff since 2001. The popular and well-respected coach had only recently stopped coming to the ballpark, working 148 of the team's 162 games during 2011, while he was undergoing chemotherapy.

Chicago White Sox batting practice pitcher Kevin Hickey passed away at age 56 on May 16, five weeks after collapsing in Dallas prior to Opening Day. Despite being a diabetic, Hickey had appeared in 231 games with the White Sox and Orioles before becoming a car salesman and, in 2003, an instructor for the Sox. Raised on Chicago's South Side, Hickey was signed out of a tryout camp. A change-of-speeds lefty, the determined Hickey got the most out of what he had, spending five long years in the minors between his big-league stints.

The death of Hall of Fame catcher Gary Carter from brain cancer on February 16 brought forth a wave of mourning from fans who remembered his contributions to the Expos' best teams of the late 1970s and early 1980s as well as to the world champion Mets in 1986. Carter, 57, played 19 years, all in the National League, before his 2003 induction into Cooperstown. He batted .262 with 324 home runs in nearly 2,300 games and was an 11-time NL All-Star who won All-Star Game MVP awards in 1981 and 1984.

"The Kid," known for his fiery disposition behind the plate, began his career as a right fielder. In 1975 he finished second in NL Rookie of the Year voting. Two years later Carter took over catching duties for Montreal and eventually won three Gold Gloves. He finished second in NL MVP voting in 1980 and third in 1986.

Known during and after his 18-season big-league career as "The Walking Man," third baseman Eddie Yost died October 16 at age 86 in Weston, Massachusetts. Yost debuted with the Senators at age 17 in 1944, becoming a regular after returning from World War II as Washington's third baseman. A careful hitter, Yost topped the AL in bases on balls six times—hence his nickname—and twice in on-base percentage. In fact, had the patient right-handed hitter not played in Washington's cavernous Griffith Stadium for most of his career, Yost might have been an All-Star many times over. From 1949 through 1958, Yost clubbed 99 homers—72 of them on the road. Traded to Detroit before the 1959 season, Yost "suddenly" became a star, batting .278 with 21 home runs and topping the AL in walks, on-base percentage, and runs in a much better hitting environment. Two years later Yost was the opening-day third baseman for the expansion Angels, but injuries curtailed his career in 1962. The first third baseman ever to play 2,000 games at the position, Yost coached for the Angels, Senators, Mets, and Red Sox from 1962–1984.

A member of the original 1961 Minnesota Twins, lefty-swinging Don Mincher spent several years platooning at first base before gaining a regular spot in 1966. Power was Mincher's game: he slugged .481 in his career against righties, playing his prime years when offense was at a premium. In his 13 major league seasons, he hit 200 home runs. Following his playing days, Mincher owned--and manned the radio mike for--the Southern League's Huntsville Stars. From 2000 through 2011, he also served ably as president of the Southern League. Mincher died March 4 in Huntsville at age 73.

Former Yankees first sacker Bill "Moose" Skowron died April 27. He was 81. Skowron clubbed 211 homers and compiled a .282 average in a 14-year career that ranged from 1954 to 1967. He broke in with New York and provided solid line-drive hitting from the right side through the 1962 season, helping the Bronx Bombers win four World Series. He was a six-time AL All-Star. A native of the Windy City, Skowron remained in the Chicago area and in later years was a regular visitor to the White Sox press box as well as a cheerful ambassador for their organization.

Former utility player Ryan Freel, an eight-year major league veteran, died from an apparent suicide on December 22 in Jacksonville, Florida. He was 36. From 2004–2006 Freel was very productive with the Reds, the second of his five teams, hitting for average, stealing bases, and crashing into walls to make highlight-reel catches. A fan favorite, Freel played with as much abandon as anyone of his era, stretching his talents to the maximum through his all-out approach, until he wore out in 2009 after eight career stints on the disabled list.

Bob McConnell, an expert in the areas of home runs and minor league playing records, died March 18 in Newark, Delaware, at the age of 87. One of the founding members of the Society for American Baseball Research (SABR) in 1971, Bob began his research on home run records in 1939. He was instrumental in compiling a database containing details on every long ball ever hit in the majors, and was co-editor, along with David Vincent of SABR's Home Run Encyclopedia, published in 1996. Bob also led a team of SABR members in compiling lifetime playing records for thousands of minor league players, leading to SABR's publication of a three-volume Minor League Stars series. McConnell combined both of his loves when he authored his own 2009 book for SABR, Going For the Fences: The Minor League Home Run Record Book.

It is almost impossible to overstate the importance of McConnell's groundbreaking research: his work was a key part of the great flowering of baseball historical research in the past four decades that has shaped the fans' and the media's collective knowledge of our National Pastime.

BUSINESS MATTERS

MLB continued its climb out of the 2007–2010 doldrums, with a healthy increase in industry revenue to an estimated $7.5 billion in 2012. Attendance was also up, with a two percent increase in tickets sold to 74,859,268 during the regular season. The average game crowd was 30,362. Even as baseball's national broadcast ratings plunged to new lows for many events, however, huge new national network contracts were signed. Moreover, local TV rights fees were also escalating rapidly, promising more riches to come for many franchise owners. The effect could be seen in the passel of hefty free-agent contracts signed before the end of December, portending a major escalation in the salaries for top-level players in the near future.

BALLPARK WATCH

Fenway Park, New England's treasured jewel box, celebrated its centennial on April 20, 2012, marking the first time a big-league ballpark had survived 100 years. Benefiting from approximately $300 million in renovations made by the Red Sox in the past 10 years, Fenway has prospered as tributes to Boston's historic ballpark poured from the mouths and pens of people great and small.

The status of other MLB ballparks changed little in 2012. One new venue opened its gates in Miami, but the two clubs trapped in what they believe to be untenable circumstances have seen almost no progress toward resolution on the eastern shores of Tampa Bay and San Francisco Bay.

Normally, the opening of a state-of-the-art ballpark, custom-built for baseball, dramatically improves the fortunes of the beneficial franchise. In the case of the newly renamed Miami Marlins, however, a disappointing season on the field, intemperate comments by a foul- and loud-mouthed manager off the field, a roiling controversy over public subsidies, and a 14-year legacy of mistrust created a witch's brew of discontent that boiled over late in the summer. What should have been a celebration of the Marlins' glittering new home quickly deteriorated into yet another salary purge that left the club mired in bitter recrimination.

The Marlins saw a 46% increase in attendance in 2012—not bad, but only enough to take them from the bottom of the league to 12th of 16. A 55% jump in the Fish's average ticket price pushed Miami's Fan Cost Index up 42%, fifth-highest in MLB. That kind of aggressive pricing can work for clubs with large and loyal fan bases, but it was risky for a club with a history of mistreating its fans. Evidence of the lack of business community support for the Marlins appeared when the club was unable to secure a naming-rights deal for Marlins Park before its opening. As 2012 ended, no rights deal was in sight for 2013, either.

While Miami sold out Opening Day, the gate for subsequent games was not as good. The Marlins tied for first place on June 3 by beating Philadelphia on the road, then came home to find average crowds of less than 24,000 for a midweek series against Atlanta. The club slid out of third place for good on June 12, then dropped into last place permanently on August 12. Management started dumping salary (i.e., star veteran players) in late July, ensuring that there would be no late-season surge in the standings or at the box office. "Hopefulness dissolved into hopelessness," was the Marlins' 2013 epitaph, penned by Palm Beach Post writer Greg Stoda.

It's too early to tell if the bold and idiosyncratic design of Marlins Park will charm fans and the media in the long run or fade quickly in the hot South Florida sun. Bold design choices tend to polarize reactions, and the Marlins aren't exactly operating in a sea of goodwill. The clever use of color at the ballpark is a plus, and the palette of colors chosen seems appropriate for subtropical Miami. The high-tech motif could become a beloved signature element of the park, or it could quickly end up seeming gimmicky, as could the psychedelic home run sculpture in the outfield. The club benefited from the tremendous contrast between its impersonal, huge old football stadium and its intimate new ballpark, but putting a winning team on the field outweighs debates about design choices.

About 850 miles west of Beantown, the Cubs' brain trust watched the celebration at Fenway as they planned for their own 2014 gala, when Wrigley Field also turns 100. A few weeks later, the latest of the ownership's plans to secure up to $200 million in public subsidies for renovations suddenly went up in smoke. A hurricane of controversy over the franchise broke in May, when the New York Times published a piece that revealed that Joe Ricketts, father of Cubs owner Tom Ricketts, was considering bankrolling a controversial media campaign against President Barack Obama during the 2012 presidential elections. Part of the controversy was due to the racially charged character of the proposed ads; part of the controversy was due to the fact that Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel was formerly President Obama's chief-of-staff.

Joe Ricketts' political conservatism was well known; indeed, most baseball owners are known to be Republicans and are generally conservative. Damage control by the Ricketts family, including Joe's daughter Laura, a member of the Cubs' board of directors as well as a supporter and important Obama fundraiser, was unsuccessful. Thus, the Cubs were forced to work on alternative plans to finance their planned extensive renovations to Wrigley.

On the West Coast, speculation continued about whether the Athletics would ever be able to solve the Giants' territorial rights to Santa Clara County and complete their long-desired move to San Jose. The commissioner's special committee that was studying Oakland's sticky situation remained mute, though reports from various sources indicated it was still working on the problem in secret. In May, a new push by civic leaders began, jump-started by Clorox Company's CEO Don Knauss, to find a viable ballpark site in the City of Oakland. (Clorox is Oakland's only Fortune 500 company.) In December, acknowledging the obvious, Oakland owner Lew Wolff asked city council for an extension to the club's lease at O.co Coliseum, offering a guarantee that the A's would remain there for at least five more seasons. (The Athletics' current lease expires after the 2013 season.)

On the Gulf Coast, the Rays' predicament continued, though support was building for letting the team explore alternative sites outside of St. Petersburg. The problem was that the City of St. Petersburg, as the Rays' landlord, vehemently opposed consideration of any Tampa Bay–area site outside the city itself, and the St. Pete burghers let everyone know that they would take legal action, if necessary, as the Rays' lease prohibits them from talking to other communities.

In Queens, the effects of the Mets changes to Citi Field were not quite as anticipated, with overall scoring at the young park actually down from the previous season. However, home runs—the key element in the fans' perception of how offensively-oriented a ballpark is—were up dramatically after the fences were pulled in before the 2012 season.

In Florida, the Red Sox opened their lavish new spring home in Fort Myers, dubbed JetBlue Park at Fenway South. The $78 million complex includes a scaled-down version of Fenway Park, continuing the trend toward larger and more expensive spring venues—both for the governments that fund or subsidize them and for the fans that attend games at them.

In Arizona, the Athletics were reportedly very close to sealing a deal at the end of 2012 with the City of Mesa to renovate HoHoKam Stadium as the A's new spring training base. The Cubs will vacate HoHoKam when their new "Wrigleyville West" spring complex in Mesa opens in 2014; the Athletics would move to Mesa a year afterward.

Not far from Yankee Stadium, two very different types of sports venues opened in 2012. In April, Heritage Field officially opened in the redeveloped Macombs Dam Park. The nod to old Yankee Stadium was "located mostly in the former footprint of Yankee Stadium" (according to the City Parks Department), across the street from the Yankees' new palace. Laden with nostalgic touches from the historic old Stadium, the centerpiece of the $50.8 million city park contains a 90-foot diamond and two 60-foot diamonds for amateur baseball. Its official opening was almost a year late, delayed partly by a dispute between the city and the team.

In a different borough of New York City, the NBA's old New Jersey/now Brooklyn Nets moved into the controversial Barclays Center across the street from where Dodgers owner Walter O'Malley had planned to build his futuristic domed replacement for Ebbets Field, six decades and an eon ago.

GREENBACKS, DUCATS, AND NIELSENS

Along with celebrating Fenway Park's centennial, the Red Sox extended their record for consecutive home sellouts to 793 at the close of last season. However, freely available tickets, along with hundreds of empty seats at some games, caused the Boston Globe and others to raise questions about the validity of the club's definition of a sellout.

As in 2011, Philadelphia led the majors in attendance with 3,565,718, but the club's consecutive sellout streak ended at 257 on August 6: the third-longest streak in MLB history, behind the current Red Sox and the Indians (455 from 1995–2001). Texas set a franchise attendance record, and Cincinnati and Pittsburgh finished with their highest gates since the inaugural seasons of their new ballparks. Washington saw its highest attendance since the Nationals' first season in D.C. in 2005.

The Marlins new ballpark upped Miami's attendance 44%, the biggest increase in MLB, though the Fish saw near-capacity crowds (i.e., 90% of capacity) only four times after Opening Day. The Nationals (21%) and the Orioles (21%) also enjoyed big jumps, while the Astros (22%) were the only club to drop more than 20% in attendance from 2011.

Affiliated Minor League Baseball attendance was essentially flat at 41,252,053 for the 15 leagues and 176 clubs that charge admission. In the high minors, Monterrey of the Triple A Mexican League led all teams with 645,302 tickets sold and an average crowd of 11,321. The Lehigh Valley Iron Pigs followed with 622,421/9,153. At Double A, the Frisco Rough Riders were the box office champions at 488,224/7,076. The Class A Midwest League's Dayton Dragons extended their pro sports record to 913 consecutive sellouts, averaging 8,532 per opening.

In the tough business climate of independent baseball, the three leagues most likely to survive in the long term did better at the gate, up four percent overall as the Atlantic League and American Association established attendance records. The entry-level Frontier League stayed afloat, but the Can-Am League, down to five teams, suffered a 21% drop in tickets sold. The badly-run North American League imploded at the start of the season, with its six-team United Division in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas playing out the season on its own. It was unclear at year's end if a viable independent league would form to replace the ashes of the many defunct indie leagues on the West Coast.

MLB savored a banner preseason in 2012. The Cactus League drew 1,712,042 fans to its sunny exhibitions, exceeding the Arizona loop's only one-year-old record by almost 100,000. The Diamondbacks were the March attendance champions, drawing 186,828 for an average of 11,677 at Salt River Fields. The Grapefruit League gate set an all-time record, too, with its 1,622,957 patrons, an increase of almost 60,000. In Florida, the new record was mostly due to the Marlins playing two exhibitions against the Yankees at Marlins Park in a tune-up for the grand opening; however, the Red Sox enjoyed a 26% jump in attendance after moving into JetBlue Park. The Rockies, Giants, Yankees, Phillies, and Cubs were the other teams to draw 150,000 or more spring fans. The Indians saw a 25% increase in spring attendance, while the Angels—coming off several major free-agent signings—pulled a spring gate 47% higher than in 2011.

Total 2012 revenue-sharing payments to the have-not clubs were believed to be around $400 million again, though the actual amount of the annual transfer of wealth has not been released or leaked for several years. As expected, the Yankees were the only franchise to be invoiced under the CBA's luxury tax provision. New York shelled out $19.3 million (compared to $13.9 million in 2011) for exceeding 2012's $178 million payroll threshold.

MLB teams' total payroll ($3.15 billion) exceeded the $3 billion mark for the first time last season, with the average player salary up 2% to $3,104,563 by MLB's calculation, and up 4% to $3,213,479 by the union's ciphering. For the many players near the bottom of the salary spectrum, a more important development was the 16% bump (from $414,000 to $480,000) in baseball's minimum wage. The Giants awarded 50 full postseason shares of a record $377,002.64 after winning the World Series, while the AL pennant-winning Tigers gave out 48 full shares worth $284,274.50. The total 2012 players' pool, funded by postseason games, was $63,363.469.22, with cash awards also going to the LCS losers, the Division Series losers, and the Wild Card game losers.

The Yankees led all teams with their $224 million payroll in 2012, with the Phillies a distant second at $170 million. The Red Sox ($169 million) and Angels ($160 million) were the only other teams above $150 million. The World Series opponents San Francisco ($138 million) and Detroit ($141 million) were sixth and fifth, respectively, among the high-rollers. Overachieving Oakland had the lowest team payroll, a miserly $59 million. Seventeen of the 30 clubs had payrolls of less than $100 million, including Milwaukee's $99.9 million.

Team Marketing Report's April compilation of MLB ticket prices and ancillary costs (its trademarked Fan Cost Index or FCI) showed no change in the average ticket price at $26.98, but a 2.5% hike to $207.80 in FCA—the typical cost for a family of four to attend a big-league game. The Red Sox ($53.38/$336.99), Yankees ($51.55/$324.30), Cubs ($46.30/$300.29), and Phillies ($37.42/$257.16) were the only clubs with FCI's topping $250. The only club moving into a new ballpark, the Marlins, were also the only club to raise prices more than 15%. [See Ballpark Watch below for analysis of Miami's 2012 pricing.]

At the other end of the scale, five teams had average ticket prices of less than $20, with the Padres' $15.67 the best bargain. Those five clubs (Arizona, San Diego, Pittsburgh, Tampa Bay, and Los Angeles of Anaheim) also were the only ones with FCI's of less than $160, with the Diamondbacks package of $145.94 the least expensive in the game.

Three teams who disappointed in 2011 dramatically cut prices: the White Sox lowered the face value of their ducats by an average of 29%, the Dodgers by 24%; and the Mets by 16%. For South Siders in Chicago, that meant a 14% drop in the cost of going to a game; for Angelenos, 10%; for New Yorkers, 5%. The defending world champion Cardinals chose not to use their World Series trophy as an excuse to jack up prices, keeping their 2012 FCI to within one percent of 2011's figure.

On the tube, MLB's fortunes in 2012 were almost universally trending lower. Local TV ratings were down 5-6% overall, with big drops in the local Nielsen ratings for the Yankees, the Phillies, and the Astros. Meanwhile, the Tigers, Reds, Orioles, and Nationals all enjoyed big increases in local viewership. Game of the Week broadcasts on Fox slid another tenth of a point to 1.7 during the regular season, with the season-ending broadcast between the Tigers and Twins "pulling" a dismal 1.0 rating.

TV ratings for MLB's so-called "jewel events" in 2012 were very poor. The All-Star Game captured only a 6.8 rating, one-tenth of a Nielsen point off 2011's all-time low. The much-ballyhooed Wild Card games notched only 3.4 (AL) and 2.6 (NL) Nielsen ratings in their debut year. Ratings for the Division Series, which are perennially weak draws, were down 19% from 2011 to a tiny 2.2—even though all four series went the full five games. The League Championship Series fared better, showing a 5% uptick over the prior year. However, in the Fall Classic, the Giants' sweep of the Tigers was an unvarnished disaster. The first game garnered a record-low Nielsen for Series openers, and the overall 7.6 Nielsen rating (25% lower than 2011's) was the worst-ever by a large margin (previous nadirs were 8.4 ratings in 2008 and 2010).

Baseball's continuing prosperity showed itself in the annual Forbes magazine estimates of franchise values. (Published in March, they were largely based on 2011 data.) Only two clubs, the Mets and Rays, showed small declines in value, while 23 clubs enjoyed double-digit increases in their net worth. The average MLB franchise valuation increased 16% to a new high of $605 million. Forbes estimated that operating income, however, dropped 13% to $14 million for the typical club.

The Yankees, MLB's most valuable franchise, increased to a record $1.85 billion (up nine percent). The Dodgers moved into second place, worth an estimated $1.4 billion—up a whopping 75%, due to the anticipated end of McCourt's reign of error and the anticipated windfall from a new TV deal. The Red Sox ($1.0 billion, up 10%), Cubs ($879 million, up 14%), and Phillies ($723 million, up 19%) rounded out the top five. The least-valuable teams were the Athletics ($321 million), Rays ($323 million), Pirates ($336 million), and Royals ($354 million). The Marlins were at No. 21 ($450 million), up 25% because of their new ballpark.

The foundering Mets righted their ship in 2012, wriggling free of the epic web of Madoff litigation at an affordable price and then injecting some badly need capital. In March, after winning several legal skirmishes, the Mets owners settled all outstanding issues with the bankruptcy trustee for a nominal $162 million—none of which had to be paid immediately and all of which may never have to be paid—very favorable terms indeed. The new capital was the result of selling a dozen minority shares at $20 million each, mostly to relatives of the owners and to SNY, the Mets' RSN (regional sports network). The moola went partly to repay $65 million in emergency loans taken out in the previous two years, with the rest earmarked for 2012 operations.

In La-La Land, the Dodgers' long-running soap opera was finally canceled—good news for MLB and absolutely great news for Dodgers fans. Under the supervision of a federal bankruptcy judge, the club and the valuable land surrounding Dodger Stadium were sold in late March for a pro sports record price of $2.3 billion to Guggenheim Baseball Management LLC. Mark Walter was the controlling partner. The ownership group included the marquee name of NBA legend and LA Lakers superstar Magic Johnson along with Stan Kasten, who became the Dodgers' new president and CEO. Kasten was previously the president of the Washington Nationals and Atlanta Braves.

On December 17, Veteran scribe Bill Shaiken of the Los Angeles Times characterized the ownership group thusly: "The Guggenheim purchase did not fit the traditional models of sports team ownership: a rich guy, a partnership of rich guys, a corporation buying the hometown team, or a corporation buying a team with an obvious business purpose in mind—most commonly, a television company wanting to make sure the team did not take its business to another television company."

Partly because the new owners didn't fit the traditional baseball mold, and partly because the purchase price stunned many observers, many critics suggested that the Guggenheim group had overbid during the heated auction. However, as 2012 wore on and estimates of the value of the Dodgers' TV rights escalated from $4 billion to more than $6 billion or more, the critics seemed short-sighted. In December, all that was holding up a reported precedent-setting, 25-year deal with Fox—which would create an RSN built around the Dodgers—was how it would be structured. The equity component of the deal would likely be the deciding factor in determining what portion of the annual avalanche of millions would be subject to baseball's revenue-sharing provisions.

In December, MLB and StubHub announced a five-year contract extension that kept the online ticket reseller as MLB's designated site for buying and selling ducats on the secondary market through 2017. Two clubs, the Yankees and Angels, opted not to participate in the new arrangement; both teams had been very critical of the previous deal, believing that the officially-sanctioned resale of their tickets undercut their pricing and hurt their attendance. Initial reports erroneously said the Cubs had also opted out, but Chicago reached agreement with StubHub later in the month. The new contract set a floor on MLB ticket prices for the first time, effectively preventing tickets from being resold for less than $6.00 and ensuring those buyers paid at least $10.40 (with the associated fees). New York and LA cannot prevent fans from selling their ducats to Angels and Yankees games on StubHub, however, so it was unclear if their opting out would have much of an effect.

HOT STOVE LEAGUE

For the first time, a qualifying round was staged for the World Baseball Classic. The 12 national teams that had won at least one game in the 2009 Classic were automatically invited to play in the 2013 WBC tournament, but the final four slots in the 16-team tournament were up for qualification.

Canada, Chinese Taipei, Panama, and South Africa—who participated in the 2009 WBC without winning a game—were joined by 12 other invitees to form a 16-club qualifying round, split into four brackets. Two of the brackets were played in September, the other two in November. No current MLB player participated in the September round. Even in November, the recognizable names were of former big-leaguers like Ramiro Mendoza and Edgar Renteria.

Spain and Canada won the September brackets, staged in Florida and Germany, respectively. Host Chinese Taipei won its November bracket, while the final qualifier in Panama saw Brazil emerge as a surprise winner.

The blockbuster trade/salary dump returned in a big way to Miami in 2012. The supposed new-look Miami Marlins shed salary and talent in a most conspicuous way, just like their Florida Marlins predecessors, sending five name players to the Blue Jays for a passel of youngsters.

Earlier Marlins purges had come after the expansion club's 1997 World Series win and in the mid-2000s. This time, the club began retrenching within a few months of opening its new taxpayer-subsidized stadium, dumping its high-priced talent after the Fish's 2012 hopes had crashed and burned.

The disassembling of the team had begun in July, with the Marlins in fourth place. It continued in October, when disgruntled ex-closer Heath Bell was traded with $8 million in cash to the Diamondbacks, who sent center fielder Chris Young to the Athletics, who completed the tripartite trade by sending Class A shortstop Yordy Cabrera to the Fish.

The bigger news came in mid-November, however. Off to Toronto trooped shortstop Jose Reyes, center fielder Emilio Bonifacio, catcher John Buck, and starting pitchers Josh Johnson and Mark Buehrle. The five veterans carried contracts with some $165 million in salary, guaranteed and yet to be paid. Miami tossed a reported $8.5 million to the Jays to relieve a bit of the immediate impact on their payroll.

In exchange for more than one-third of their 14 regulars (eight positions, five rotation starters, and closer), the Marlins received starting pitcher Henderson Alvarez, shortstop Yunel Escobar, reserve catcher Jeff Mathis, and four young hopefuls. Alvarez, who at 22 had started 31 games for the Jays, is the type of talented but green arm that fits well on a rebuilding club. Escobar, slated to make $5 million in 2013, was shipped cross-state by the Fish on December 4 to the Rays for 23-year-old infielder Derek Dietrich.

The four prospects include 23-year-old Adeiny Hechavarria, a raw talent who started 41 games at three infield positions in Toronto after hitting .327 at Triple-A in 2011–2012; Class A pitchers Justin Nicolino and Tony DeSclafani; and 21-year-old outfield prospect Jake Marisnick, who finished 2012 at Double-A. The Blue Jays, who have built a deep organizational talent base, believe that they dealt from a position of strength and were not gutting their system.

An immediate outcry from Miami fans and a storm of criticism in both local and national media caused Commissioner Bud Selig to announce a review of the complex transaction. To no one's surprise, the commissioner's approval was granted after he examined the megadeal. The new-look/old-look minimum-wage Marlins subsequently signed well-traveled veterans Juan Pierre and Placido Polanco to one-year deals to fill some of the resultant gaps in new manager Mike Redmond's 2013 lineup.

Toronto GM Alex Anthopoulos had begun to restructure his roster shortly after the World Series. On November 3, he sent infielder Mike Aviles (acquired from the Red Sox as compensation for permitting manager John Farrell go to Boston) and catcher Yan Gomes to Cleveland in exchange for pitcher Esmil Rogers. Five days later, he signed free-agent infielder Maicer Izturis, formerly with the Angels, for three seasons, and purchased hard-throwing right-hander Jeremy Jeffress from the Royals. Rogers and Jeffress are seen as key pieces of a reconstituted Jays bullpen, while Izturis will compete for the second-base job.

The day the megatrade was finalized, Toronto also announced that it had signed free agent outfielder Melky Cabrera for two years at $16 million. The deal was controversial because Cabrera, who hit a career-best .346 with San Francisco in 2012, was suspended August 15 after testing positive for synthetic testosterone. [See PED section on page 70]

The next day, Toronto named John Gibbons its new/old manager, replacing Farrell. Gibbons had previously managed the Jays from 2004–2008.

Not content with one blockbuster deal, Anthopoulos made another the week before Christmas: a four-catcher package in which Toronto plucked 2012 NL Cy Young winner R.A. Dickey from the Mets. The 38-year-old Dickey, in the last year of his contract, could not agree with New York on an extension. After the two teams agreed on the trade, Dickey then initialed a $25 million, two-season pact with Toronto to keep him there at least through 2015, with a club option for 2016.

Mets GM Sandy Alderson extracted a reasonable return for Dickey, his personal catcher Josh Thole, and backstop prospect Mike Nickeas. New York received catching prospect Travis d'Arnaud, catcher John Buck, pitching prospect Noah Syndergaard, and 18-year-old outfielder Wuilmer Becerra. D'Arnaud was viewed by some as the Jays' top prospect, largely for his bat, but has had trouble staying healthy. Syndergaard and Becerra are highly regarded, though years away.

The day after dealing Dickey, New York snared reserve outfielder Collin Cowgill, 26, in a trade with Oakland. Cowgill had no regular slot waiting for him with the Athletics, but could at least be part of a platoon with the Mets. The A's received 21-year-old infielder Jefry Marte in the swap.

The Padres and Athletics rearranged bit players on November 18. San Diego sent former independent-league hurler Andrew Werner and utility player Andrew Parrino to Oakland in exchange for hurler Tyson Ross (2-11, 6.50 in 2012) and first sacker A.J. Kirby-Jones. The deal was a scenery-change for Ross, who blew through the minors but never showed much with the A's. Werner (2-3, 5.58), a change-of-speed lefty, shifts from one good pitcher's park to another. Parrino could fill in at shortstop, while Kirby, a 24-year-old power prospect, batted just .248 at high Class A.

Fresh off their disappointing World Series, the Tigers inked 37-year-old outfielder Torii Hunter (two years, $26 million) on November 16 to solve a big problem by manning right field in Detroit. The same day, Gerald Laird hooked on with Atlanta, which needed a backup catcher to replace David Ross, who the Red Sox had signed for two years two days before. On December 10, Detroit replaced Laird with former Royals backup Brayan Pena for one year.

On November 20, the Orioles sent utility infielder Robert Andino, 28, to Seattle in exchange for 25-year-old Trayvon Robinson, a still-raw "tools" outfielder. Robinson, out of options with the M's, jumps into the hopper of possible Orioles fourth outfielders. In addition, outfielder Nate McLouth, who restarted his career after a late-season promotion to Baltimore, re-upped for 2013 at a salary of $2 million.

The Kansas City Royals, coming off a season in which several of their young starters suffered serious injuries, went in the other direction by signing 34-year-old innings-eater Jeremy Guthrie to a three-year, $25 million deal on November 20. Acquired from Colorado on July 20, Guthrie was 5-3, 3.16 for the Royals. More big moves would come later.

On the north side of Chicago, the Cubs beefed up their paper-thin rotation. First, the club signed veterans Scott Baker and Scott Feldman to deals. Either or both could rebound. Chicago followed up by inking 32-year-old free-agent Kyuji Fujikawa, who had spent the last 12 years with the Hanshin Tigers of the Japanese Central League. Fujikawa has closing experience but is more likely to set up for the Cubs, who proffered a two-year contract worth $9.5 million.

Then on December 20, in a totally unexpected move, the Cubs locked up inconsistent but gifted 29-year-old righty Edwin Jackson for four years at a surprisingly high price-tag of $52 million. That same day, Chicago signed another well-traveled righty, Carlos Villanueva, for two years at "just" $10 million.

Several National League clubs signed relievers to head-scratcher contracts. On October 30, the Dodgers inked reliever Brandon League to a three-year contract that could net him $33.5 million with incentives; even without bonus payments, the nearly 30-year-old righty is still $22 million richer. League was designated as LA's closer, a job he has held for less than two seasons in the bigs.

The Reds followed with a three-year deal for Jonathan Broxton at the end of November, paying him $21 million to become their closer, which would allow Cincinnati to move Aroldis Chapman into the rotation as planned a year earlier. Broxton racked up 27 saves between the Royals and Redlegs in 2012.

Prior to the opening of the annual Winter Meetings in December, several clubs staked out positions with free-agent signings and trades. The Braves pulled off the first big signing of the offseason, agreeing to a five-year, $75 million contract with free agent outfielder B.J. Upton. The 28-year-old, who had spent his entire career with Tampa Bay, remains a dangerous blend of power and speed despite his lackluster performance in 2012. Upton replaced Michael Bourn, who at 30 had his best season for Atlanta but was not seriously pursued.

Needing a reliable closer, the Angels took a flier on November 28 on former Phillies closer Ryan Madson. Coming off April 2012 "Tommy John" surgery, Madson agreed to a one-year deal for $3.5 million, loaded with an equal amount of incentives. "Los Anaheim" then dealt reliever Jordan Walden to Atlanta for starter Tommy Hanson, seen as a possible back-end rotation starter.

The next day, Washington acquired Denard Span from Minnesota, a fine center fielder and good offensive player. In return, the Twins received Alex Meyer, the Nationals' No. 1 pick in 2011. Meyer, effective last season in both mid- and high-A, gives the Twins something they've lacked recently: a top-level mound prospect.

On the first day of the winter conclave in Nashville, the Mets announced that they had retained third baseman David Wright, locking up their franchise player through 2020 with an eight-year, $138 million contract extension that replaced his 2013 arrangement. Coming off another losing season, the Mets were boxed in, essentially having to sign Wright to placate their fan base. New York eased the financial burden by back-loading Wright's new contract.

The Red Sox engaged in a flurry of activity in the offseason. Late in November, Boston locked up free-agent DH-outfielder Jonny Gomes. On December 3, free-agent catcher–first baseman Mike Napoli provisionally agreed to a three-year pact with the Sox for $39 million. Concerns about the health of the former Texas catcher–first baseman, however, held up finalizing the deal through the end of the year. After one year with the Dodgers, Shane Victorino signed for three years and $39 million to play right field at Fenway on December 4. Two days later, the Red Sox agreed on a one-year, $4.25 deal with Koji Uehara, late of Baltimore, to bolster the front end of their bullpen.

On December 13, Boston announced that right-handed starter Ryan Dempster had come to terms for two years and $26.5 million. Four days after that, BoSox GM Ben Cherington announced the signing of shortstop Stephen Drew, whose $10 million option had been declined by Oakland, for one year at $9.5 million (plus $500,000 in incentives).

At the opposite end of the success spectrum, the world champion Giants were also very active over the winter. In mid-November, they re-inked Jeremy Affeldt to a three-year, $18 million deal. San Francisco anted up for four more years with center fielder Angel Pagan on December 3, re-signing him for $40 million. The next day, the Giants announced that postseason hero Marco Scutaro, 37, had agreed to a three-year, $20 million pact. San Fran later brought back outfielder Andres Torres, 32, on December 13, via a one-year deal for $2 million. Finally, on December 17, the club inked reliever Santiago Casilla for three years at $15 million, plus an option for 2016.

The Rangers and free-agent reliever Joakim Soria came to terms on December 4 on a two-year, $8 million deal. Soria missed 2012 after "Tommy John" surgery and may not pitch until midseason. When he does take the hill, he's expected to set up for closer Joe Nathan. Late in December Texas signed former White Sox catcher A.J. Pierzynski for one year at $7.5 million to replace Napoli.

Late on December 4, the Rockies and Astros announced a trade. Houston sent reliever Wilton Lopez, who finished 2012 as the club's closer and was now arbitration-eligible, to Colorado for former top pitching prospect Alex White. Houston made two other additions in mid-December. First, the Astros inked free-agent Jose Veras, formerly with Milwaukee, to a one-year deal for $1.85 million, plus an option year. Veras could become the budget-conscious Astros' closer in 2013. Second, the Astros signed former Rays first baseman Carlos Pena to a one-year, $2.9 million deal, plus incentives, to DH for the newest member of the American League club.

Washington shored up its starting staff December 5 with the signing of veteran starting pitcher Dan Haren, late of the Angels, who came aboard for one year at $13 million. Haren had wanted a long-term contract, but concerns about his injuries dampened his appeal.

On December 5, the White Sox snared veteran free-agent infielder Jeff Keppinger for three seasons, guaranteeing the 32-year-old $12 million. The same day, the Mariners took a chance on former star outfielder Jason Bay for $500,000 plus incentives. The 34-year-old had been released by the Mets after three disappointing seasons, with New York buying out the final year and whopping $21 million left on Bay's contract.

Arizona fortified its bench with multiple veterans in December, signing corner infielder-outfielder Eric Hinske (one year, $1.35 million), corner infielder Eric Chavez (one year, $3 million), and re-upping second-string catcher Wil Nieves (one year, $800,000).

Also on December 5, Anaheim brought on board another No. 4-5 starter in Joe Blanton with a two-year, $15 million pact. The Angels also announced they had snared lefty reliever Sean Burnett, free-agent from the Nationals, via a two-year, $8 million deal with a vesting option for 2015.

St. Louis made a couple of minor moves in December. To shore up a problem area, the Cardinals on December 7 signed lefty reliever Randy Choate, who made 80 appearances in 2012 with the Marlins and Dodgers—tied for tops in the majors. The Redbirds then beefed up the corners a week later by signing Ty Wigginton for two years and $5 million on December 14. The well-traveled 35-year-old infielder-outfielder had spent 2012 with Philadelphia.

The Cubs tacked on veteran outfielder Nate Schierholtz, locking up the defensive-minded outfielder for a year at $2.25 million. Schierholtz likely will platoon with Dave Sappelt in right, allowing David DeJesus to play center.

Rebuffed in its attempt to sign a free-agent center fielder, the Phillies acquired Ben Revere from Minnesota on the Winter Meetings' last day. In exchange for Revere, the Twins netted starting pitchers Vance Worley and Trevor May. Worley pitched well in 2011, but not so last season. May, a potentially dominating strikeout pitcher, spent 2012 trying to refine his command at Double-A.

Shortly after the meetings ended, the Diamondbacks signed veteran free-agent Brandon McCarthy for their rotation for two years at $15.5 million. This signing would seem routine had the 29-year-old McCarthy not been hit in the head by a line drive while on the mound for Oakland last September 5 and suffered a fractured skull.

Also after the meetings, the Twins snared journeyman starter Kevin Correia for two seasons at $5 million per. Minnesota followed that up a week later by signing former Mets starter Mike Pelfrey, coming off a 2012 elbow rebuild, to a one-year, $4 million contract with incentives. The Twins also took a flier on a minor league contract with veteran hurler Rich Harden, who missed last season after undergoing shoulder surgery.

The owners of the Dodgers, anticipating a huge windfall upon signing a new TV contract, displayed their very deep pockets by spending more than $200 million on December 9–10 to improve the club's rotation. First, Los Angeles signed 25-year-old Korean starting pitcher Hyun-jin Ryu to a six-year, $36 million contract, with an opt-out clause after five years. The agreement triggered an additional $25.7 million payment by LA to his former club, per the Dodgers' November bid for the right to negotiate with Ryu.

The big bomb dropped on December 10 when the Dodgers officially announced they had locked up Zack Greinke for six years and $147 million, two days after news had leaked of the megadeal with the most sought-after free-agent pitcher on the market. The huge contract pushed LA's projected 2013 payroll what will likely be a record $225 million or more.

Kansas City fans will expect a lot more in 2013 after a major December 10 deal that saw the Royals trade perhaps the top hitting prospect in the game, outfielder Wil Myers, along with two talented but underperforming minor league hurlers (Mike Montgomery and Jake Odorizzi), plus Class A infielder Patrick Leonard to Tampa Bay. KC received in exchange strong-armed hurlers James Shields and Wade Davis, along with a player to be named. Shields should anchor the Royals' 2013 rotation, with Davis returning to the rotation after spending 2012 in the Rays' bullpen.

In addition to adding Yunel Escobar and Myers, the Rays signed free-agent first-sacker James Loney, who decamped from Boston for a one-year $2 million deal that carried another possible million in incentives.

The Yankees were uncharacteristically quiet at baseball's winter bazaar, but on December 11 New York nabbed veteran Kevin Youkilis for one year at $12 million. With Alex Rodriguez out indefinitely after undergoing hip surgery, Youkilis was ticketed to hold down the hot corner in the Bronx.

Attempting yet again to cobble together a lineup on a shoestring budget, the Indians agreed to terms on December 9 with Mark Reynolds ($6 million plus incentives). Reynolds will play first base and add some power to a lineup that last year lacked offense from the corner infield spots.

On December 11, Cleveland, Arizona, and Cincinnati announced a nine-player trade. Unable to reach a long-term agreement with outfielder Shin-Soo Choo, the Tribe shipped him and utility infielder Jason Donald to Cincinnati. Choo is expected to take over in center field in the Queen City, though he has played only 10 games there in the majors. The Reds, in turn, sent center fielder Drew Stubbs to the Indians and packed off shortstop prospect Didi Gregorius to the Diamondbacks. Also moving from Cleveland to Arizona were lefty reliever Tony Sipp and first baseman Lars Anderson. Arizona, in return, sent three pitchers—highly regarded prospect Trevor Bauer and relievers Matt Albers and Bryan Shaw—to Cleveland.

Cincy made two other moves that week, re-signing Ryan Ludwick, who had a comeback season in 2012 while playing left field, for two years and $15 million, plus a mutual option year. The Reds also added veteran infielder Jack Hannahan, late of Cleveland, signing him for two years and $4 million. Hannahan, a fine defender and reportedly an asset in the clubhouse, could platoon at third base.

The other big trophy in the free-agent hunt was bagged on December 13, when Josh Hamilton agreed to a five-year stint with the Angels while making pointed comments about the Rangers' interest in retaining him. Even though the Anaheim franchise is competing in the same market with the free-spending Dodgers, the $125 million price tag for the 31-year-old Hamilton was a bit surprising, since LA is just one year into the $240 million Albert Pujols deal.

A week after obtaining Hamilton, the Angels thinned their roster by sending DH-first baseman Kendry Morales up the coast to Seattle in exchange for left-handed pitcher Jason Vargas. Morales, 29, enjoyed a decent comeback season in 2012. Vargas, a journeyman southpaw, posted 14 wins last season along with a 4.78 road ERA.

Another important piece of the free-agent arms race fell into place on December 14 when the Tigers re-signed starter Anibal Sanchez for five years and $80 million. Sanchez is a fine starting pitcher, a No 3 in a top-flight rotation and a No. 2 for many teams not so blessed, but his price tag fueled speculation about how much it might cost Detroit to retain superstar Justin Verlander, whose contract expires in two year.

On December 21, the market again showed its inflationary state as small-market Pittsburgh signed former Twins and White Sox southpaw starter Francisco Liriano, who hasn't posted a sub-5.00 ERA since 2010, to a two-year, $12.75 million deal, of which only $1 million in 2013 was guaranteed because of Liriano's extensive injury history.

Philadelphia added some pitching the weekend of December 15, inking former Texas reliever Mike Adams for two years at $6 million per and snaring onetime Washington starter John Lannan on a one-year, $2.5 million contract. Adams is expected to set up for Jonathan Papelbon, while Lannan will enter spring training as the No. 5 starter.

Oakland needed a shortstop and on December 17 nabbed Japanese free agent Hiroyuki Nakajima with a two-year, $6.5 million deal with an option for 2015. Nakajima, 30, has hit for power and average in his Nippon Pro Baseball career.

The Brewers, heretofore quiet in the Hot Stove League, inked Tom Gorzelanny for two years and $6 million December 20. The lefty had spent 2012 in the Nationals' bullpen.

Three outfielders signed new contracts on December 22. First, Arizona inked Cody Ross (with the Red Sox in 2012) for $26 million for three years; the D-backs will be Ross's sixth team in nine years in The Show. Second, Raul Ibanez defected from the Bronx to make a one-year, $2.75 million deal with Seattle. The 40-year-old is expected to serve as a platoon DH and stabilizing influence in a young clubhouse. Finally, economy-minded Cleveland shocked many by giving a four-year, $56 million contract—with a vesting option for year five—to right fielder-first baseman Nick Swisher, also lately of the Yankees.

Not normally active in the free-agent market, the Pirates raised a few eyebrows by signing 29-year-old power-hitting catcher Russell Martin—last seen in the Bronx—with a two-year, $17 million deal that is the club's largest free-agent contract ever.

As Christmas neared, the Pirates and Red Sox made a six-player deal. Pittsburgh sent closer Joel Hanrahan and second-sacker Brock Holt to Boston in exchange for mound prospect Stolmy Pimentel, reliever Mark Melancon, infielder Ivan DeJesus Jr., and first baseman Jerry Sands. Pittsburgh felt comfortable making the deal because it had re-signed free-agent reliever Jason Grilli for two years and $6.75 million earlier in December. Grilli had resurrected his career with the Bucs over the past two years and will now be given a chance to close.

Finally, on December 31, Kansas City signed two veterans to minor league deals in the way that teams do when they feel they are close to winning: outfielder Endy Chavez and former AL MVP Miguel Tejada.

CY YOUNG AWARDS

In 1956 the BBWAA, prodded by Commissioner Ford Frick, created the Cy Young Award in order to annually honor the best pitcher in the major leagues. The award was named after Cy Young, the all-time leader in pitching wins (and losses), who had died in 1955. The impetus for the award's creation was the lack of support pitchers had been receiving in MVP balloting. Ironically, the creation of the Cy Young would further reduce that support. In 1967 voters began selecting one Cy Young winner in each league.

The Ex Post Facto Awards were created by the editors of the ESPN Baseball Encyclopedia in 2004 to fill in the large gaps in the history of baseball's three most prestigious awards. The winners of the Ex Post Facto awards were selected based on the belief they would have been given the MVP, Cy Young, or Rookie of the Year award for that league if such an award had existed for that season. The editors did their best to apply contemporaneous standards when evaluating players of each era.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR AWARDS

Inspired by its Chicago branch, which had been honoring top rookies since 1940, the Baseball Writers Association of America took the Rookie of the Year awards national starting in 1947. After honoring only one rookie in 1947 and 1948, the BBWAA started giving the award to a rookie in each league in 1949.

The Ex Post Facto Awards were created by the editors of the ESPN Baseball Encyclopedia in 2004 to fill in the large gaps in the history of baseball's three most prestigious awards. The winners of the Ex Post Facto awards were selected based on the belief they would have been given the MVP, Cy Young, or Rookie of the Year award for that league if such an award had existed for that season. The editors did their best to apply contemporaneous standards when evaluating players of each era. Note that no rookie award was given for the first year of professional league play in 1871, when every player was effectively a rookie.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER AWARDS

The Baseball Writers Association of America began giving out its Most Valuable Player award in each league in 1931. Prior to 1931, there was no continuous MVP-type award.

The Ex Post Facto Awards were created by the editors of the ESPN Baseball Encyclopedia in 2004 to fill in the large gaps in the history of baseball's three most prestigious awards. The winners of the Ex Post Facto awards were selected based on the belief they would have been given the MVP, Cy Young, or Rookie of the Year award for that league if such an award had existed for that season. The editors did their best to apply contemporaneous standards when evaluating players of each era.
